have the pleasure of inviting you to an evening talk on

Preventive Peace

The world has always known how to make peace after war. That may no longer be enough. As global disorder deepens, the real challenge is learning to build peace before conflict breaks out. Not as its outcome, but as its alternative.

In his new book La pace preventiva, Francesco Mancini argues that what works in an increasingly diverse and fragmented world is not shared values or common political systems, but something more pragmatic: coalitions built around specific, concrete, and mutual interests.
