5.30-12 trailer tire

Thinkstock/Comstock/Getty Images The 5-wire seatbelt has connections for markers, brakes and signal lights, as well as an electric braking system. By lowering the 5-wire to a 4-wire, you eliminate the connection for the trailer brakes. If your trailer is significantly heavy and is on the upper limits of the towing vehicle capacity, it is recommended to upgrade the vehicle to a 5-wire harness. If the loss of the braking system is within the permitted limits of the vehicle, the connection can be made in one of two ways. Go to the trailer power store and choose a wiring adapter that bridges the gap between the two connectors. Both 4-wire and 5-wire connectors are available in flat and round configurations. Understand the shape of the connectors before choosing an adapter. Tap the 4-wire side of the adapter into the harness of the car. Tap the 5-wire side of the adapter into the harness of the trailer. Check that the trailer lights are reacting to the vehicle's commands as expected. Cut the 5-wire harness from the head of the trailer, leaving as many wires as possible. A band of three-eighths of an inch of insulation from white, green, yellow and brown wires with striped strippers. Attach the green wire 4-wire straps to the green wire of the trailer with the butt of the connector. These work by placing one wire at each end and squeezing with pliers. Connect the yellow, white and brown harness wires to the color wires on the trailer with the butt connectors. Wrap each joint in an electrical tape and also cut the end of the blue wire. Wrap all the wires together with electrical tape to provide a second layer of moisture protection.
