Instagram has launched a new resource for parents of teenagers who use Instagram. Called The Parent's Guide, this is Instagram's coverage of parents who may start to wonder whether social media apps like Instagram are bad for their children. With most teens spending every waking moment on their smartphones, parents are becoming increasingly concerned about what they are doing online. And with Instagram being hugely popular among teens, Instagram is trying to soothe parents' fears. Helping parents understand Instagram's Instagram Parents Guide is designed to help parents and carers learn more about how teens use Instagram and make sure they use the app in a positive way. To that end, Instagram has focused on managing privacy, commentary and time. Manage privacy as teens can make their account public or private, and what a private Instagram account means. It also details how to block unwanted interactions that stop people from seeing their messages. Management Comments details the Comment Management section of the app. It also details how teens can block comments, report comments and/or accounts that violate Instagram policies, and filter out comments that contain certain words and phrases. Time management details how teens (or their parents) can control and manage their time spent on Instagram. Instagram now allows you to set daily reminders and disable push notifications, all of which should help prevent social media addiction. Stop, Collaborate and Instagram Instagram have developed a parenting guide in collaboration with organizations such as National PTA, Scholastic, ConnectSafely, Boys and Girls Clubs of America, as well as the National Center for the Prevention of Bullying. Which adds a touch of authority to the document. Besides, we're pretty sure she's Olsen's long-lost sister. That's why we're constantly talking about how to point it out, and 2) desperately clicking to buy everything she wears. I dress very femininely and courageously at the same time, Broek tells Refinery29 about his style. I like to wear men's shirts with more figure-hugging pieces, or dresses with sneakers. My style is also colorful and kind of quirky, because of my glasses. Someone recently noticed that I dress like a five-year-old and I think she was right.
