Yes, other people memorized the chapters they read in other cities. NANETTE.57. What Granger means by your quote, you're not important. You're nothing.? Granger is saying that all humans in this world are really insignificant because those who live longer will only see a glimpse of what happens. The resources are there for everyone to have, but not everyone will use the resources. As a result, it is the message and idea that is important. This emphasizes Faber's idea that the meaning of the book is far more important than the book itself. Granger wants Montag to remember that just because if he's more experienced at the moment doesn't mean he'd have a higher social status. It's the idea that people want to learn and pass on knowledge that's important. 58. Explain the latest implications of events in their last 4-5 pages. Society is destroyed by the stupidity of humanity. It is a cycle and society must be renewed, which begins with the war destroying the city of Montag.
