Words like something, everywhere, anyone and no one are perpetual pronouns. We use them for people, things and places. People: someone/someone/nobody/all Things: something/nothing/nothing/all Places: somewhere/anywhere/anywhere/anywhere/anywhere We can use anyone or anyone - the meaning is the same. This is also true for someone, no one and everyone. These are exceptional words, so we use a special verb with them. Does anyone want a cake? Everyone loves a new puppy. However, we can use them/them/them. Anyone who wants a cake should hand over their plate. No one brought their bag. We can use these words ourselves for a short answer. A: What are you Have? B: Nothing! We can use them at the beginning of the sentence as a subject or as an object of an offer. Nothing was done. She didn't do anything. Some and any- We've talked about how to use some and any. (See here if you need to consider.) We use someone/someone/something/somewhere just like some, and we use whoever is anywhere in the same way as any. We use someone/something/somewhere mostly in positive suggestions. We can find someone to help. There's something in the bag. Let's go out this weekend. We use anyone/anything/anywhere in the same way, but for questions and negative suggestions. I can't find anyone to help. Is there anything in the bag? We're not going anywhere this weekend. We also use anyone/anything/anywhere with suggestions that have a negative feeling. There's almost no one here. She ate almost nothing. We spent the weekend at home, not going anywhere. We can use someone/something/somewhere in questions when they offer or request or when we think the answer is yes. Are you looking for something? (I think you're looking for something.) Do you want to eat something? We often use anyone/anything/anywhere after if. If anyone would like coffee, tell me now! If something is wrong, you need to call the front desk. If there is anywhere that you do not want to go, please send me an email. We also use anyone/anything/anywhere with value doesn't matter who/who/where. Anyone can do it. I'd like to go anywhere! I just don't want to be here! She was so hungry she ate anything. No- Nobody and no one. Nothing and nothing. Nowhere and nowhere. I don't know anyone who's coming, I don't know anyone who's coming. There's nothing here, there's nothing here. She doesn't want to go anywhere and wants to go nowhere. Usually the offer with no stronger and more decisive. We don't usually use a negative verb with anyone/nothing/nowhere. Sometimes you hear it, but it's not standard English. I don't know anyone. Everyone and everyone. Everything and all things. Everywhere and everywhere, all places. They can be used in positive suggestions, negative suggestions and questions. I think it was everywhere in Europe. He doesn't know everything.
