It depicts a cracked statue of a blindfolded Lady Justice , bound by ropes with her breasts exposed and her scales overflowing with dollar bills, with the title in graffiti style. Released on September 7, , by Elektra Records , [49] And Justice for All was acclaimed by music critics. It's probably the most incisive music I've ever heard, in the literal sense of the word.

In a retrospective review, Greg Kot of the Chicago Tribune said that And Justice for All was both the band's "most ambitious" and ultimately "flattest-sounding" album. After years of refusing to release music videos, Metallica released its first for "One". Slant Magazine ranked it number 48 on their list of the " Greatest Music Videos", saying that Metallica "evoke a revolution of the soul far more devastating than that presented in the original text". Although Metallica's music was considered unappealing for mainstream radio, And Justice for All was highly successful in the US. And Justice for All achieved similar chart success outside the United States. It topped the charts in Finland , peaked within the top 5 on the charts in Germany , Sweden , and the United Kingdom , and remained on the UK chart for six weeks.

And Justice for All received a three times platinum certification from Music Canada for shipping , copies, a platinum certification from IFPI Finland for having a shipment of little over 50, copies, and was certified gold by the Bundesverband Musikindustrie BVMI for shipments of , copies. And Justice for All was surpassed commercially by the band's following album, Metallica Guitarist Kirk Hammett noted that the length of the songs was problematic for fans and for the band: "Touring behind it, we realized that the general consensus was that songs were too fucking long.

One day after we played "Justice" and got off the stage one of us said, 'we're never fucking playing that song again. When performed live, the opening war sound is lengthened from seventeen seconds to approximately two minutes. At the song's conclusion, the stage turns pitch-black and fire erupts from around the stage. The live performance is characterized as a "musical and visual highlight" by Rolling Stone journalist Denise Sheppard.

And Justice for All that have frequently been performed are "Blackened" and "Harvester of Sorrow", which were often featured during the album's promotional Damaged Justice Tour. Metallica played the title track in the opening show of the Sick of the Studio '07 tour, for the first time since October , and made it a set-fixture for the remainder of that tour. A statue of Lady Justice is commonly placed on the scene, to be torn down as the song approaches its conclusion. All lyrics were written by James Hetfield , except for the spoken word section of "To Live Is to Die", posthumously attributed to Cliff Burton as it was adapted from four lines Burton authored. In , the album was remastered and reissued in a limited edition deluxe box set with an expanded track listing and bonus content. The deluxe edition set includes the original album on vinyl and CD, with eleven CDs of live tracks, home demo recordings, B-sides, rough mixes, and radio edits recorded from to , and four DVDs of unreleased footage of the band.

Its broad mandate to educate fellow citizens on social justice concerns and provide guidance for action through regular newsletters and extensive media engagement. Justice for All currently operates several campaigns and programs to address issues that do not receive enough international, public and political support. Since , our focus has been to raise awareness regarding the persecution of ethnic and religious minorities in Burma. We promote policies that protect religious freedom, address the root causes of mass displacement, and recognize the plight of refugees and forced migrants. Burma Task Force, our most active program, supports a more robust US and international response to the Rohingya Genocide. Using media and social media this program aims to engage and mobilize grassroots community members to demand policies that protect human rights and support humanitarian aid.

Since , our Washington DC staff has worked to inform policymakers regarding the persecution and genocidal policies in Burma. In early , Justice for All developed a parallel partnership for interfaith coalition building as part of the Faith Coalition Against Genocide. We have also increasingly emphasized inter-ethnic solidarity among leaders in the Burmese diaspora, convening meetings and conferences. In summer , the State Department released a strong report on the Rohingya and in late the House of Representatives passed a strong resolution on Burma with a to 1 vote. Through organized advocacy days on the Hill, as well as the help of DC based consultants, we have worked to pass legislation in Congress, including sanctions, and to ensure effective language is included in the appropriations bills. While working to build awareness on a grassroots level, we have also maintained our regular presence at the United Nations.

To respond to emerging crises, we developed the Save Uighur program in early and helped organize rallies and panels in partnership with Uighur leadership in the USA. We also organized Kashmir programmimg while also continuing to raise awareness of the plight of Muslim and other minorities in India. Along with productive meetings with officials, and organizational letters involving Nobel Prize winners and prominent NGOs, our Petition asking the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation not to honor Prime Minister Modi gained more than , signatures. To inform, advocate and mobilize for justice, we need your support, skills and effort to create a bigger impact. Genocide against Muslims is escalating across the world. Emergency Campaign. Let's make it eight. Let's go crazy with it. Critic Simon Reynolds noted the riff changes and experimentation with timing on the album's intricately constructed songs: "The tempo shifts, gear changes, lapses, decelerations and abrupt halts". And Justice for All sounds different from the band's previous albums, with longer songs, sparser arrangements, and harsher vocals by Hetfield. He argued that the album is more of a progressive metal record because of its intricately performed music and bleak sound. The album was noted for its "dry, sterile" production. He was not present during the album's mixing, for which Steve Thompson and Michael Barbiero had been hired beforehand. Rasmussen assumed that, in his absence from the mixing process, Thompson and Barbiero used only the close microphones on the mix and none of the room microphones, causing the "clicking", thin drum sound.

At the instruction of Hetfield and Ulrich, Newsted's bass guitar was made almost inaudible. Newsted was not satisfied with the final mix and was unhappy that the bass was inaudible. In , Hetfield and Ulrich said they had mixed the bass low not to belittle Newsted, but because their hearing was "shot" following heavy touring and so they "basically kept turning everything else up until the bass disappeared". Anger could use a little less tin snare drum, but those things are what make those records part of our history. The album title was revealed in April And Justice for All , after the final words of the Pledge of Allegiance.

He named contemporaries Nuclear Assault as the only other band who applied ecological lyrics to thrash metal songs rather than singing about Satan and Egyptian plagues. Concerns about the state of the environment "Blackened" , corruption "And Justice for All" , and blacklisting and discrimination "The Shortest Straw" are emphasized with traditional existential themes. Because the original recordings are not used on the track, the composition is credited as written by Burton and played by Newsted.

The spoken word section of the song was erroneously attributed in its entirety to Burton in the liner notes. The first line was actually written by German poet Paul Gerhardt "When a man lies, he murders some part of the world. Donaldson "These are the pale deaths which men miscall their lives. Cannot the kingdom of salvation take me home? The artwork was created by Stephen Gorman, based on a concept developed by Hetfield and Ulrich. And once across the initial threshold, users will encounter a continuum of services from self-help materials to alternative dispute resolution to limited-scope or full legal representation.

Housed at the National Center for State Courts and operating in partnership with the Self-Represented Litigation Network SRLN , the Justice for All initiative offers a framework for engaging with a wide range of stakeholders to systematically expand access to justice. Through broad collaboration, it ensures there is no wrong door through which to enter the civil justice system. Judges, court administrators, private bar leaders, and civil legal aid and pro bono providers nationwide have long been experimenting with a range of innovations, including:. While these innovations have led to improvements, they are often limited to a single area such as family law or else limited in their scope, either by geography or by a focus only on users already engaged in the court process.
