During Southern Charm on Monday night, Thomas Ravenel hosted a dinner party. Case: he wanted to bestow some of his wisdom on his costars. I mean, of course. He's been through some shit and wants his buddies to learn from their mistakes. As good as his intentions might have been, the actual dinner went awry. WOO, did it ever. He delivered a monologue and his audience TURNED on it. And on each other. T-Rav was at the center of a fight between Craig Conover and Katherine Dennis. Craig broke in. Katherine broke in. T-Rav looked deflated. I was wondering if they ever got around dessert, or if this piece was edited out of the episode. I've never been to a dinner party quite like T-Rav's, but that didn't stop me from imagining what it's like to be a fly on the wall. Without further ado, I present the glass T-Rav Menagerie. The glass T-Rav MenagerieYour friend calls. He tells you he's having dinner. It will be an honor for him if you are present, because it will be a very important meeting. He tells you that he has life advice for you and other guests. You start laughing, but you immediately pretend to clear your throat. You don't want to laugh at your friend. He means well. You accept the invitation. On the night of dinner, you sigh as you rifle through your wardrobe. What can I wear to unsolicited life party tips? You wonder out loud. I don't remember what my graduation teacher said. Oh, look at that! I don't remember my school teacher's name! My memory, I'll tell you. You choose an outfit, be prepared, and drive up to the owner's house. You and other guests are sitting at the official dinner table. Dinner is served. So is life advice. But life's advice is peppered with Glass References Menagerie. He's saying something about the mental hospital. It's been a long time since you read the Glass Menagerie, so you're not sure what he's saying exactly. Once again, your poor memory leaves you hanging. You're going to take your word for the master. One of the other guests mutters under his breath that the host is away, but you don't know for sure. You nod politely as the owner tells that three days before the ceremony he will call his wedding to a girl with a shopping cart. He says he threw it away like yesterday's trash. He continues to talk about his own glass menagerie. You do your best to follow along. But then, you get distracted by a pebble caught in the heel. You and quietly work the pebbles out of the shoes. No one notices. Success! Sorry time when you remove the pebble, you missed too much of the master's story. You're officially lost. You shrug your shoulders and turn to dinner. Other guests can't stop smiling and/or laughing. Oh, this must be the culmination of history, you think. I wish I hadn't missed the installation! And then the dinner party gets sour. Hold on, I thought he was joking. C'money that I missed?!! One of the guests is offended by the comments of the host. Another of the guests seems to be offended by the first offended guest, having thought for dinner at all. The second guest says something that really upsets the first guest. Two offended guests argue. The host is immersed in the conflict. Two other guests dive into the hallway and get a divorce. You finish dinner, take your coat, and ask everyone not otherwise engaged guests if they would like to hang out. Of course, they'd like to hang out. How dare you ask. This is Charleston, damn it, it's a gift. Everyone's always at the party. Image: Bravo's second season of the hit reality show Bravo Southern Charm may be over, but fans of the show will continue to discuss drama, cast, and antics because that's what true charmers do. For example, what better way to anticipate the third season of South Charm (which we hope will happen) than by focusing on thomas Ravenel's terrible friend's qualities? Yes come on, you know you think that too. He makes very significant others, especially when it came to his ex Katherine Dennis. Let's face it, T-Rav and the worst. Boyfriend. Ever. Throughout the entire second season, Thomas was focused on his campaign (and that not so charming Lift Roof ad) that his relationship with Katherine failed miserably. Whether he's leaving her in the dark about his campaign, going southern balls without her, never listening to her when she spoke, or expecting that she wouldn't have a life and just getting dinner on the table, Thomas as a guy was one of the worst things I've ever seen on a reality show. Thank goodness they are broken (or is this photo from June 1 Katherine and Thomas say otherwise?), because Thomas has a lot to learn to do when it comes to treating women the right way, especially when it's his significant other and the mother of his child. With that said, here seven times T-Rav was the worst friend ever. At the time he forgot to thank KathrynRemember when they had people during Thomas's campaign? During T-Rav's thank-you speech to the guests, he forgot to thank Katherine. Not only was it so bad, but he also voiced out loud: Who else did I leave? While he was dancing rather than listening to Cooper's ball, Katherine tried to talk to Thomas seriously, but instead of listening, he decided it was best to demonstrate his dance moves and ignore it. Thomas, dancing won't forget Katherine.3 At that time he had gone without On Cooper's night of elaborate Southern Ball, Thomas threw Katherine at home for a while because it was important for him to campaign and say hello to everyone early in the night. It took him forever to go back and even get Katherine. I'm sure it's not the right Southern etiquette. At the time he went to HotelOh, Thomas, just because your campaign is important to you, it doesn't mean that you just completely ignore your girlfriend. For example, remember that time Thomas went to the hotel and said he couldn't talk to Katherine for a while because his campaign needed him? Yes, not cool. The time he didn't want Katherine's help, his entire campaign, he didn't want Katherine to participate. All she wanted was to be part of the campaign, but he wouldn't let her. Not good. Boyfriend. At a time when he didn't want Katherine in his life, his girlfriend Katherine had every right to want to be a part of Thomas's life. However, he didn't seem to really want it because he was too busy shooting funny campaign ads or not talking to her for three days at a time. This time he said horrible thingsThomas is a master of horrible comments, especially when it comes to Katherine. For example, here's one: Once my mother was always able to get lunch on the table for us to eat, I just expect someone to come close to that standard. No, it just isn't. See what I mean? Worst. Boyfriend. Ever.Images: Brianna Stello/Bravo: Bravo (screengrab) Thomas Ravenel couldn't be better at Southern Charm anymore, but he didn't finish rousing drama for the show's actors. Since Ravenel and his ex Katherine Dennis split in 2016, things have been wild. There has been an ongoing custody battle that has led to a number of nasty and shocking allegations against both sides, some of which have proved to be true. Now, after allegations of sexual assault, it has emerged that Thomas Ravenel may have been partying irresponsibly hard the night his son was born. And sources claim that Ravenel's main vice, cocaine, was implicated. Allegations of sexual assault by Thomas Ravenel (en) Charles Sykes/Bravo/NBCU Photo Bank via Getty Images Ravenel was under serious scrutiny after allegations of sexual assault emerged during his custody battle with Katherine Dennis. One of Ravenel's former employees, a nanny for her children, came forward with allegations that Ravenel assaulted her. The woman, Don Ledwell, claims that Ravenel approached her without hesitation and tried to kiss her. Ledwell goes on to say: It escalated from where he wouldn't take no for an answer. Although it was not penile penetration, what he did was defined by law as first-degree rape. Dawn told people: I turned around and he had his pants dropped, not wearing underwear ... He was blocking the door. I was embarrassed, and scared. In light of these allegations, Katherine Dennis decided to take sole custody of her children. Ravenel's previous problems with cocaine were William Shepard Rose III, Thomas Ravenel, Whitney Sudler-Smith,Paul Cheney/Bravo/NBCU Photo Bank via Getty Images While serving as treasurer in South Carolina and state chairman for Rudolph Giuliani's presidential bid, Ravenel was running in with the feds. Ravenel was caught buying less than 500 grams of cocaine for distribution. It threw him 10 months in prison. Ravenel handled the situation somewhat lightly, often joking about it. He tried to run again, but his jokes didn't seem to help. It was just something I did in my personal life and I really had no problem with cocaine. What I realized later, I just really liked the smell of it, joked Ravenel on Southern Charm. Partying too hard whitney Sudler-Smith, Thomas Ravenel (en) Brianna Stello /BRAVO/NBCU Photo Bank via Getty Images Nanny Don Ledwell recently made additional incriminating allegations about Ravenel's behavior. During his deposition, Ledwell testified that Ravenel spent the night his son was born, partying and engaging in illicit drug use. Katherine Dennis gave birth to a son, Saint, a month ahead of schedule. According to Ledwell, Ravenel was too busy partying to be on hand. Ledwell told the court that her friend, an Uber driver, picked up Ravenel and his friends at Ravenel's home. They wanted the party. They were all intoxicated ... They were making cocaine in her car, Ledwell said. Thomas was the last person to be dropped off and he wanted to give her a tour of his home. ... She's trying to convince him to go to the hospital. Like: Dude, if you're celebrating the birth of a baby, you need to go to the hospital and spend time with the baby. Wasn't the baby born early? Ledwell went on to add: And so he's like yes, yes, yes. Well, would you do me a favor? I'll pay you $500 to get the cocaine off my face and wipe it off my clothes.
