It originally aired on September 18, 1993 on Nickelodeon and ended on November 24, 1996, with a total of 52 episodes over 4 seasons. A typical half-hour episode of Modern Life of Roco included two twelve-minute stories with a commercial break between them. Sometimes one story will be told within half an hour of slot time as part I and Part II. The Rocko's Modern Life team produced all but one in the San Fernando Valley area of Los Angeles, California, USA. Murray produced the pilot episode, Trash-O-Madness, at his studio in Saratoga, California; Murray animated half of the episode, and the production took place entirely in the United States, with animation in Saratoga and processing in San Francisco. On August 11, 2016, Nickelodeon announced that they had a green light hour-long special film called Static Cling, of which Murray was the executive producer. It originally aired on Netflix on August 9, 2019. Note: Murray described I don't have a son as one of his favorite episodes because he addressed issues affecting Murray, directors and writers. Murray also refers to the presence of Fatheads, created by Doug Lawrence. It's also the first episode to feature a song by Pat Irwin and sung by Kate Pearson and Fred Schneider from B-52, as well as the first episode to be full-length rather than half-length. 15a2aPipe DreamsRoy MuerinGeorge Maestri, Stephen Hillenburg, Mark O'HaraStifen Hillenburg2 October 1994 (1994-10-02)202a After Heffer flushes the toilet too many times (and are not willing to pay for a real plumber), he and Roco have decided to fix the toilet... and find out why the toilet is clogged. 15b2bTickled PinkyPit MichelsMartin OlsonJeff Swampy MarshOctober 2, 1994 (1994-10-02)202b While at O-Town's jackhammer convention, Roco rushed to the hospital for appendicitis (although Heffer mistakenly taken to the emergency room for liposuction after muttering, I'm too fat for an administrator and collapsing from exhaustion) and Roco's anxiety about surgery leads to a strange dream, a dream where his appadia wants another day of fun before he has to leave. When he becomes a hit, however, Ralph does everything he can to destroy Wacky Delly. Note: Murray described Wacky Delly as one of his favorite episodes because he considered issues affecting Murray, directors and writers (primarily how Joe Murray wanted to quit his own show after his first wife's suicide, how he felt that his time away from her led to her own life and how Nickelodeon wouldn't let him). Murray and Richard Leroy filmed a stage of meatloaf live on Murray's patio with a camera to capture the colors of films from the early 1960s. Murray cooked the meatloaf and Carol Wyatt, the color supervisor, placed a press on her fingernails on her arm and used her hands in the stage. At first, the camera didn't work. When Murray decided to finish the shoot, the camera functioned, allowing the shooting to continue. During filming, two flies landed on meatloaf. Leroy believed the flies spoiled the shoot, while Murray believes the flies are expanding to shoot. Murray used the plates involved in the production scene until he accidentally broke the plate; Murray threw away the plates. This is also the last episode to be a full-length episode. The rest of the series is half length, although the next two episodes make a full-length two-episode series. 37a11a Big questionGeorge ChialtasTim Hill and Martin OlsonDug Lawrence28, 1996-01-28)312a Filburt finally asks Dr. Hutchison to marry him.
