Media Type B.C. Broadcasting NP - Newspaper Media Focus Co College University GI - General Interest Language England - English Daily Reflectors has been an important part of the lives of Greenville, Pitt County and eastern North Carolina for more than a century. The company was founded in 1882 by David Jordan Jord and Julian R. Jord, who bought printing equipment from the owner of The Express, for whom they once worked. Moving equipment into his mother's one-room school, the brothers began their weekly newspaper, Eastern Reflectors. In 1885, David Jordan Jord became the sole owner and publisher of reflectors, beginning the daily publication December 10, 1884. Daily Reflectors has since expanded its coverage to all of Pitt County and surrounding areas. The daily reflector prints 16,500 papers every day, including more than 11,000 home delivery subscriptions. The daily reflector also conducts newspaper (NIE) programme in education. This program depends on fundraising efforts and contributions through sponsors. Newspapers are distributed through pitt county schools as well as nie programs for East Carolina University and Pitt Community College. The NIE programme promotes literacy through the use of daily newspapers as an instructional support in the classroom. Partner daily reflectors with teachers and local businesses to encourage literacy, broaden the students' community and global outlook and equip the region's teachers with a powerful tool for teaching. It is headquartered in Greenville, North Carolina. [1] The history paper was originally titled Eastern Reflectors, and was founded in 1882 by David Jordan and Julian Jord. They set up the paper in a part of their mothers' school home with equipment they had purchased from another paper they had worked for, the Greenville Express. It became known and published daily as reflectors on December 10, 1884. The daily reflector was bought by Cox Newspapers in 1996. Her and mixer are free monthly magazines produced by daily reflectors. Her - as the name implies - is a magazine for women. The mixer — written with a lowercase M—18-35-year-old population (which includes large student bodies of East Carolina University and Pitt Community College) with local music, night spots and events for the same area. Cox News Financially put many of your properties up for sale in 2008 and, including daily reflectors. In addition to the paper being offered for sale, longtime publisher Jordan (Jordy) Jord III announced his resignation on Jan. 5, 2009. In 2009, Cox sold his 13 North Carolina newspapers, including Rocky Mount Telegram, Elizabeth City Daily Advances and Reflectors, to Cook Communications, a privately held family company headed by John Kent Cook, son of Jack Kent Cook. John Kent Cook moved to the Greenville area to become chairman of Cook Communications North Carolina and publisher of Reflectors. [2] [3] In September 2018, Adams Publishing Group, based in Greenville, Tennessee, announced that it had purchased the property of Cook Communications LLC, including Reflectors, Rocky Mount Telegram and Elizabeth City Daily Advance.
