A: Here is the problem. You are using the "com.adobe.flash.application" filter. This is for an AIR application which I don't think is what you're after. Instead you want to use the "com.adobe.flash.application.native" filter. Scary Stories to Tell in the Dark, The ABCs of Death, and a Gotta Read for Kids – Things That Brought Back Haunting Memories and Left Me Ready for Halloween What are your favourite scary stories that you like to retell to your kids and maybe one or two of us adults? I just read the next two kids books that can be read as a trilogy, so I hope you enjoy! Scary Stories to Tell in the Dark – by Alvin Schwartz was one of the first scary books I read. I still remember those covers with those angry looking monsters, scary scenes, and a doll. This series was for children but it made me feel like it could be for grownups. The ABCs of Death: A Sentimental Journey – by John Montgomery in 1958 was an easy read that felt like a bedtime story. I especially liked the part where the mom and her daughter go to the corner store to buy some but she left her purse. They lost it. It was this dark, gloomy, shop and the mom tries to comfort her daughter. It made me think about what a terrible loss it is to lose a loved one. The Starry Messenger – by Adelita Wunsch (1882-1969) is a German children's story of a girl who's told her brother she wants to play with him when she's really just trying to save him from being eaten by a monstrous spider. This is a well written children's story and one of my favourites. New study says that "key executive functions" of the brain were more active in introverts than extroverts, and that this may explain why they are introverted. Does that mean introverts are better at introspection? Introverts are always "thinking" about things. Do they think about their internal states more?
