Note: This page is not a test or training course. It can be used aid and only as an additional resource. Any worker who works with hazardous products or may potentially be exposed to dangerous products in the workplace should be trained by WHMIS. However, whMIS training can be helpful even if workers think they may not be directly at risk. Incorrect preparation can lead to serious injuries and hefty fines. The WHMIS training program is an excellent option for new employees, members of the Joint Committee on Health and Safety, as well as for any employee who wishes to have a better understanding of the new provisions of the Globally Agreed System, as well as the requirements approved by the WHMIS legislation. Below are 20 sample questions and answers and WHMIS test tips. You can use these questions and answers as an additional resource to prepare for WHMIS training in the workplace. This test includes true or false sample questions, definitions, multiple selections, and pictogram (symbols) questions. Tip. Take a notebook and pencil. Get down the questions and try to answer before you look at the hints/answers! The question #1 - What does WHMIS mean? This is one of the first things that you will probably be taught in your whMIS training class. If you're not sure about the answer, feel free to go back and read the first paragraph of the article. Understanding the acronym is the first step to understanding WHMIS training. (Source of questions) The question #2 - Truth or Lies: WHMIS is not the law. WHMIS is more than just a training course - it's the law. If you answered this question falsely, you were right! WHMIS first became law in 1998. (The source of the questions) question #3 - What duties will employees perform under WHMIS? Employees have more than one duty under WHMIS. It is important to know and understand your rights and responsibilities as an employee, and includes your responsibilities according to WHMIS. The Canadian Center for Occupational Health and Safety (CCOHS) states that workers should: Participation in WHMIS training programs Take the necessary measures to protect themselves and other employees Participating in monitoring and identifying hazards (source of questions) issue #4 - What does GHS GHS For? Did you know that there have been recent changes in WHMIS? Canada has now joined the SIS with PG. Can you guess what that means? If you've never heard of it before, it stands for a globally harmonized chemical classification and labeling system. (Source of questions) Want more questions? Just fill out the form below! Boston Pizza Online Training Description Boston Pizza is a chain of restaurants that has locations throughout Canada and the United States. To be completely sure that all their employees understand and can discuss each menu item, they have their employees use eLearning. This particular eLearning method comes through an online testing website. It's a way that allows Boston Pizza to train its employees and then follow that with a quiz afterwards. They start with explanations about new menu items or something else that every employee should know as WHMIS training. They take the employee through each step and then at the end of each chapter they have a quiz review that the employee has to go through. Their training website . This eLearning's goals included benefits for both the company and its employees. 1. Make sure the employee knows the items on the menu. 2. Make sure the employee knows the laws and safety rules that apply to them. 3. Have evidence that the employee has been trained and therefore should not do anything wrong in the workplace. 4. Act as a way to encourage staff morale. The eLearning audience is aimed at the right audience in the perfect way. It is aimed at restaurant employees, people who need information to complete their work. Since employees are paid to complete the quiz, they are motivated in the right direction to complete the quiz. The overall effectiveness of eLearning has been quite positive. He was able to fully teach how to make food for me, although I already knew how to do it. I found minor problems with quizzes when it came to repetitiveness, but overall it set its message well. The Score Checklist here's a link to my checklist for Boston Pizza Training as an eLearning tool. Summary and likes / Doesn't like the whole website is too big to complete in one squat. When I tested this task, I passed four tests, each of which followed the same delivery method-information dump, followed by a quiz. The information learned was easy to remember and even visualize as these were items that I wanted to work with on a daily basis when I was in the kitchen. Even dumping information on topics such as WHMIS led to easy information that I could remember during the quiz afterwards. Sometimes I found myself forgetting some of the just because they only talked about it in one sentence. If I wasn't able to remember almost the entire first part, I ran ran getting the question wrong and on these quizzes, you need at least 85% to get through. I felt that this method was effective, I was able to remember almost everything taught me and I am sure I could apply it to a real life situation. At the same time, I would say the best testing method would allow interns to apply it to real life, since they don't have as much experience. Something interactive or more visually pleasing will allow the new intern to fully understand how he looks in the workplace, not just on the Internet. I thought that because the quizzes were divided into so many topics, it completely conveyed the message to the interns. However, I feel that employees can split the quiz badly and end up forgetting some of what they did on an older date. The best way to resist this forgetting would be for the worker to get to work and make the orders they would. Simply put, learning without day-to-day hands at work will be much less effective than people just reading a website and taking quizzes.
