Buffalo meat lipids included a considerable amount of high melting point triglycerides (TGs). To evaluate the feasibility of a coarsened mesh patch to estimate Fractional Flow Reserve (FFR) in trauma patients. A prototype mesh patch with varied number of elements and a reduced element density to approximate the FFR coronary physiology was applied on in vivo FFR measurements of coronary stenoses. The error rate of the FFR estimation by a modified coarse mesh patch using Indirect Iterative Reconstruction (IIR) reconstructions with different acceleration factors (acceleration factor of 1, 2 and 4) was compared to the error rate of FFR estimated by the 520fdb1ae7
