Michael Jeff Halvorson, who has a criminal history, was charged with five counts of fraud in connection with the case. Halvorson allegedly paid $1 million for the winning ticket in a $656.6 million Powerball drawing that was held on Oct. 29. After the winner cashed in her ticket, she contacted Florida Lottery officials, who discovered Halvorson had made purchases at the same retailer with the same PIN in the days following the drawing, according to a news release from the Florida Department of Law Enforcement. Powerball tickets were sold in 24 states, along with Washington, D.C., Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands. No winners were drawn in the U.S. Virgin Islands. Powerball officials have warned consumers to remain vigilant as crooks exploit the high-profile game and those with an interest in winning a jackpot. In an incident earlier this year, several people from a Chicago suburb won $1 million in Powerball after the same winning ticket was purchased in five locations. The winner was later arrested after she attempted to spend the money. Powerball's odds of winning are 1 in 175,201,816, according to the Florida Lottery. A woman from the Philippines is suspected of taking over 2,000 gold coins that were inside a safe in the home of a Saudi diplomat in Dhahran, a Saudi city, according to an official document reviewed by Reuters. Puan Girit Salamat, 40, is a resident of the southern Philippines island of Mindanao, and her family members were on the property when she opened the safe with the help of her cousins, according to a copy of the police report dated November 10, 2019. She is accused of stealing a total of 2,073 golden sovereign coins, which are worth about $38,000 in Philippine pesos. The Philippine Department of Foreign Affairs is still investigating the incident, according to a spokesman for the department. It was not immediately 520fdb1ae7
