By Damica Brownswood Updated September 22, 2017 Using your computer to download movies is an easy way to watch your favorite movies and new releases. As you research the different ways of getting a movie selection, keep in mind that it is against the law to download any movie without the consent of the copyright holder. Before you subscribe to any movie download service, make sure the company is authorized to distribute your choice of movie. This can be achieved by revising the terms of service. Subscribe to a legitimate movie download site like Roxio Cinema Now. Registration is free and you will only be charged for items you choose to download. Click on the new movie tab and start searching for a choice. You can also use an advanced search key to find movies by name. If you find it difficult to navigate the site or suppress its names, narrow down the search by choosing the type of movie. Make your choice. You can buy movies or rent movies for a short period of time. All your selections will be added to the basket. You will be able to view your names before you make a purchase. Continue to check. Browse your shopping cart and enter your credit card information. Follow the instructions and links to properly download your movies. Read all download instructions before you buy. You won't be able to record certain movie formats on an empty DVD. If your mission is to transfer downloaded movies to an actual DVD, make sure this action is possible before you make a purchase. Once you download the movie, you won't be able to return it. Follow the latest daily buzz with buzzFeed Daily Newsletter! VOTE LOVE OR LOATHE ON ANNA'S PREMIERE STYLE So here's what this is about: Anna Kendrick plays Bec, a new girl in college and not interested in joining any clique what it is. That is, until she overheard singing in a communal shower and forced to join Bellas, all the girls sing the group. It's amazing - especially when it starts to really mix things up! CHECK OUT OUR FAVE CHICK FLICKS Here in Cosmo we love a good singing movie - Sister Law, Mama Mia, even a high school musical. But none of them are necessarily funny, but is the thing, Pitch Perfect is a comedy - is it Rebel Wilson and hello? She's funny. And zac Efron loves her. As a young entrepreneur I spend most of my life outside the office pitching for investors and potential clients. Despite spending countless hours practicing my presentation, I always get feedback on how I can improve. Last month, I introduced my startup Alumnify - a platform to attract alumni - at the V2 Pitch competition at the University of San Diego and walked away from first place and a $40,000 cash prize. Not bad for a day's work, but I don't think I wasn't preparing for it. Led to the contest, I did A/B testing on presentations I would practice. I then analyzed which aspects of my step led to better results and determined how many practices I needed to deliver a first-class presentation. Fortunately, I traced the patterns in that greatest triggers to the wau audience and win that next customer, investor or employee. One of the reasons why the audience likes to hear the traction is confirming that the problem you are tackling is worth it. If you don't have any evidence in your customers or income yet, use customer interviews, beta tests, and reviews you've received. For Alumnify, I always mention that we are coldly called over 850 universities in my field. This not only shows that our team has taken the time to understand who the customers are, but it also gives our company credit that we appreciate the needs of our customers. 2. Keep them guessing. We all know that the best stories are the ones with amazing endings, don't we? After all, this is what your audience cares about the most, they all want to know how the story is going Related: Pitching for Profit: Delivery Presentation Investors Love While Ending May Be What Everyone Wants to See. I've Learned How Important It Is end of your step right before the climax. Be open about your progress, struggle and how far you've come, but set your pitch in a way that makes it tell your audience the best that's yet to come. By doing this, investors or customers are more likely to track your company's progress to see how the climax plays out. (People hate to see only half of the film.) Give your audience the feeling that they can help become part of your amazing end story by buying your product or investing in your company. 3. Practice, clarify and repeat. Unable to prepare, you prepare for failure. -Benjamin Franklin Two weeks before my contest, I started rehearsing my pitch. In total, I practiced more than 300 times to the point where I could read my pitch word for word in the shower, or if someone woke me up in the middle of the night. To prepare for the part of the contest, I turned to fifteen angel investors and asked them to give me a list of questions that I should expect. I then made over 150 notecards with all the questions the judge could ask me. By the time the contest, I left nothing before the event. As I pitched more and more, I learned that the best way to guarantee success is to get more prepared for your pitch. Practice so much that you don't need to pitch the deck and can still nail the presentation perfectly. Once you can pitch anytime, anywhere (even in the worst conditions), you'll be so confident when you say that your enthusiasm and message will rub off on your audience. Whether it's pitching yourself for a new job or pitching your company to a new client, you're constantly looking for an advantage that will convince someone to take the risk of working with you. In any step scenario, there are things you can do to help in your quest for an elusive partnership, and what you can do that will put on the road to success. Here are three things you can do to help seal any deal, and three things that will scare off many prospects. Related: 8 Tips to Gather Experience to Land Your Dream Job What To Include: 1 X notes place: Be specific. Let the client know why your exact skill set and background will be a boon to their cause. Convey why you and only you have the experience necessary to help them succeed. Don't spout platitudes as I'll be a good fit or I'll work. That's what everyone says. Describe in detail how your particular skill set will benefit them, and them to understand why it would be a mistake not to work with you. Li Li Li knowledge of coding, fluency in multiple languages or knowledge of the culture or demographic you know the company wants to expand into, let them know how your skills intersect with their needs: the perfect X.2. Keep in mind the details: Want to demonstrate your work ethic and professionalism? Polish your step until it shines. This means using the correct grammar, punctuation and syntax. A hastily assembled step or cover letter riddled with errors looks careless and tells the customer that you are not ready to take the time to get the small details right. And if you can't take care of the little things when your career is on the line, why should they trust you with their big goals when their company is on the line?3. What I learned: As our career progresses, we learn a huge amount. We learn what to do - and often what not to do. When pitching, offer a few specific examples of the lessons you have taught that resonate throughout your career. This lets the customer know that you are a sponge intelligence, able to soak up positive interactions by adding them to their professional toolkit. You can also offer one or two examples of cases where you have learned what not to do. This will show that you are intelligent, able to recognize warning signs and prevent a potential disaster. What to avoid: Related: 10 toxic words you shouldn't say in a job interview1. Personal links: For most of us, friends and family will go to the end of the earth to help us succeed. What's great is when it comes time to plan a birthday or wedding, but not so much when you're trying to convince someone to put money or her reputation on the line. Leave all the extraordinary praise from people who will be innately biased in your favor. We're very happy that your cheat thinks you're a great prospect, but that means more comes from someone who won't win anything and sings your praises.2 Follow fatigue: It's great to follow onto the field a week or so after presenting it. And if you don't hear back in a few weeks, check for status. But the constant follow annoys the customer and makes him seem like you are impatient. Sign up once or twice, but then release it. If you can't hear from them, move on to the next step. Most likely, they are, too. Stand out - just not like a sore thumb: Most companies have specific rules when it comes to presenting pitches. If you follow these rules and your skill set coincides with what they are looking for, there is a good chance that you will get a callback. But too many people believe that if they break the rules and submit pitches that are different from what the customer asks, they will be seen as rebellious, Which may be true, but it also allows the customer to know from day one, if you don't feel like doing what you're asked to do, you'll do it differently, in a different way, at their expense. Geniuses break the rules. But you must first know where the lines are if you are aiming for color beyond them.
