You can bathe your sex doll just like you would make a real person. If your doll is made of silicone or TPE, then take them into the shower once or twice a month and wash them using mild soap and warm water. You can use a microfiber cloth to clean the face, but do not get any water in the head or neck. To clean the openings, use a shower head or a loofah. Some dolls have removable cocks and pussies, which makes them even easier to clean, but if they don't, you need to put in some effort to make sure you clean them thoroughly. Otherwise, they can develop mold or bacteria. Once you have washed your doll, you need to dry it thoroughly, either by patting it down with a towel or letting it air dry. Never put it away when it's still wet. For TPE dolls, you need to give it a little extra care. After it is dry, you should rub a little baby oil into the skin to keep it smooth and life like. You can also use a little corn starch or talc powder once a month to maintain skin texture. To prevent sagging or damage to the skeleton, save the sex doll hanging in the closet or lying in its case. Make sure it is in a cool, dry place and never store it in direct sunlight. Don't save TPE and silicone sex dolls together! Silicone and TPE do not mix, so if you have more than one sex doll, save them separately. And remember, just use water-based lubricant with silicone toys! If you fantasize about your sex doll wearing a sexy outfit or costume, why not dress them up? A little role play adds to the fun! Buy a dress or underwear to give your sex doll some character. When you dress your sex doll, put nylon or stockings on first. It will make the outer layers easier to put on. It is advisable to buy slightly larger sizes, so that you do not damage the skin by compressing it too tightly. If your sex doll has big breasts, other than bras are not only sexy - they also help keep the doll in good shape by keeping your breasts from sagging in stock. Finally, don't forget makeup!
