It was his second film. The cast consists of Prosenjit Chatterjee, Parambrata Chatterjee, Raima Sen, Abir Chatterjee and director Gautam Ghose, making a comeback after a 29-year absence. The film focuses on two journalists and two police officers (one suspended) chasing a vengeful Calcutta psychopath who leaves behind desks of Bengali poems. Baishe Srabon received positive reviews from critics, and was one of the highest-grossing Bengal films of 2011. The film was certified by the Central Board of Film Certification for adult language. This film brought the genre of thriller back to Bengali after a long time. The film's main plot is loosely based on the 1995 crime thriller Seven and 2008 drama-thriller Righteous Murder. A sequel to the film was released on January 23, 2020 under the title Dwitiyo Purush directed by Shrijit Mukherji with Parambrata Chattopadhyay, Abir Chatterjee and Raima Sen reprising their roles. Several murders have taken place across Kolkata, for which the serial killer is believed to be responsible. The killer strikes in accordance with the verses of Bengali poetry, which he leaves next to the victims. The police are baffled; Detective Chief Abhijit Pakrashi (Parambrata Chatterjee) struggles to solve a case that affects his relationship with his girlfriend Amrita Mukherjee (Raima Sen). The head of Pakrashi (Rajesh Sharma) returns a former police officer Prabir (Prosendjit Chatterjee) to help solve the case. Prabir, previously suspended for his cruel methods, is known to be hot-tempered and foul-mouthed. Prabir and Pakrashi work together, while Amrita (a TV journalist) and his colleague Surya Sinha (Abir Chatterjee) are the research serial killers for the series, the thirteenth and final episode of which will be about a modern killer. Meanwhile, the eccentric poet Nibaron Chakraborty (Gautam Ghosh), who considers himself part of the Hungry Generation, wanders around Calcutta at night, reciting poetry. Exploring serial killers, Visits the prison where the warden remembers Rafik Ahmed and his only confidant in 18 years in prison: Nibaron Chakraborty. She and Surya go to Nibaron's house to interrogate him; after he was met by his servant, Swapan, they are convinced that he is crazy when Nibaron says that he has a meeting with Rabindranath. They almost learned about Rafiq when Surya angered him by mentioning the arson of a book fair for which he was imprisoned. During the investigation of the case, Pakrashi sees Amrit and Surya together. Jealous and drunk, Abhijit goes to Prabir's house and pours out his heart; he tells Prabir that he lost his father at a young age, and tries to avoid alcohol because of what he did to his father. Prabir tells Pakrashi that he went to work the day after losing his wife and child, encouraging him to be strong. Surya went to Amrita cemetery, telling her he would propose in a few days. They end up in the police station after the policeman sees them (and hit Amrita). Pakrashi, still drunk, rescues them when the inspector recognizes Amrita as his girlfriend and they reconcile. The next day, casually discussing poets and poems, Prabir and Pakrashi forged that the killer strikes at the anniversaries of the death of famous Bengali poets. When they search for every possible day the killer can strike, they discover that the next date is June 29: Michael Madhusudan Dutt on the anniversary of his death. Amrita tells Pakrashi what she and Surya did, including an interview with Nibaron. This convinces him that Nibaron is a murderer, especially when Swapan tells Prabir about his employer's night walks around the city. The duo visit Nibaron as journalists and try to understand his position on the hungry generation. It is becoming clear that Nibaron does not consider the movement a failure and does not regret his attempt to set fire to a book fair many years ago. Pakrashi and Prabir watch Out at Nibaron's house on a fateful night. The hooded figure comes out; It's Swapan, who ran. He shows that Nibaron was very depressed, and burned all his poems. In the house, they find that Nibaron committed suicide, and finding another couple next to his body, realize that this was the last murder. The case is closed, and Prabir congratulates the police department on the decision of the case. About a month later comes the anniversary of the death of Rabindranath Tagore (Baishe Srabon). Prabir invites Pakrashi to meet a man named Rabindranath Mitra, publisher, and Pakrashi is surprised that Swapan is Prabir Kanai's servant. Prabir admits that he was the mastermind of the murders, and Kanai (former prisoner) committed them. He wanted to avenge the police for his suspension, which he considered an affront to his hard work, despite the loss of his family. Nibaron was easy to frame, as his business was handled by Prabir many years ago. Teh Rabindranath met regularly with Nibaron in connection with the publication of his poems, and then suddenly refuses, leading Nibaron to commit suicide. He also says That Niebaron's death was not the final murder. Pakrashi considers himself the next victim. However, Prabir makes it clear that he considers himself a murderer and intends to commit suicide because he hates the killers. Despite Pakrashi pleading with him not to, Prabir shot himself after reading the last guy.
