It includes a mechanism for a specific email address to indicate that it is being used by more than one IP address.New mobile technologies have led to the evolution of the corporate mobile workforce. They are replacing the traditional ways of thinking, planning, and behaving of a corporation and its workforce. The two most important products that enable this new corporate mobile workforce are: Mobile Devices Cloud-based Services Together these tools make possible the concept of "mobile work" – a way of doing business in which employees are constantly connected to the office and home, using a variety of mobile devices. In its 2012 report, A Cloud-First Workforce, Gartner estimates that by 2017, 90% of companies will have mobile devices that are managed with a cloud-based service. Mobile work will have no limits – anywhere and any time. The Rise of Mobile Work The New New Corporate Mobile Workforce We have already entered the mobile work era. In a recent survey by Deloitte, over half of the largest 100 companies have deployed a mobile work solution and almost all respondents are planning to deploy a mobile work solution within the next three years. Mobile Work in the Enterprise The "traditional" corporate mobile workforce has evolved. Most companies no longer have a need for a single company mobile device, or a desktop PC. So what will the mobile workforce look like in the next three years? In a study by Gartner, 75% of mobile devices will be smart phones, by 2017. This means that more and more workers will be able to access corporate networks from home. Mobile Work Becoming Mainstream As mobile work becomes mainstream, corporate mobility management will have to adapt. That means that mobility management will have to become more open and flexible. The concept of mobile work is not just a trend. By 2016, mobile work is expected to have become a new mainstream way of doing business. With the rise of mobile devices and the cloud, mobile work has become the new normal. A 520fdb1ae7
