Lawnchair is a complete launcher that mimics the Pixel Launcher watch exclusively for Android smartphones. This version, developed from AOSP Launcher 3, offers a lot of options when it comes to customizing menus and icons. Once you've installed it, the launcher adds a Pixel pill to your desktop that will lead you to a Google search rack as well as a permanent date and time widget. The app box, which appears vertically on the desktop, will also be activated. Icons also change and Google ones will appear surrounded by white circles. The best part is that Google is now available by swithing horizontally to the left. But what's really amazing about Lawnchair is that all of these features can be changed from the settings menu of the app you access by tapping the screen for a long time. Among tons of different adjustments, you can set up the search bar, activate or deactivate any of the default options, or change the size, shape, and space of separation between icons. Lawnchair, along with other well-known customizable devices such as Nova Launcher, is one of the best ways to customize your smartphone and adapt it to Android standards. Also, you don't need Android Nougat to work. Lawnchair Launcher is a go-to home screen replacement for many looking to duplicate the Pixel experience on other phones - once you get used to things like Google Discover and a first-look widget, it can be hard to get back. The updated version of the V2 has been around for a while in alpha and Play Store beta releases, although people have been clamoring and harassing developers about a stable release on the Play Store for ages. This one Finally here: Version 2 is rolling out and you can download it now. If you're not familiar with The short version is that it's a home screen replacement that can do almost anything Google Pixel Launcher can, but with additional customization options and bonus features on top. Version 1 aped Nougat-style Pixel Launcher, while this updated V2 more closely approaches Google's updated design with Oreo and forward. It can also give you Google Discover/Feed integration on the screen left of the launcher, although you'll have to separately download the additional Lawnfeed app in order to work. Among the headliners of the changes in version 2 is the expanded functionality for the widget at first sight, which can pull information including battery status and unread notifications for things such as currently playing music, email and chat messages. The app box also has Dark Theme support, Sesame integration and Pixel-style app offerings, app action, and tab/category support. More basic (but still appreciated) customization options include a variable grid and icon size, icon support, and support for shortcuts and notification points. TL:DR: This makes your phone's home screen look and behave like a Pixel, but with a lot of choice, open source benefits, and it's free. As someone who enjoys the experience of Pixel software (though not always related to Pixel hardware), Lawnchair is my go-to launcher for non-pixel devices. Regardless of whether the idea of a Pixel-style launcher is new to you or you've been using it for years, you can now enjoy the 2nd version of The Lawnchair launch that is closer to the latest Pixel experience. An update that ensures its deployment as we speak on the Play Store. If you don't see it just yet, it's also available for download over at APK Mirror. Developer: deletescape Price: Google's free Pixel phones come along with the latest Android features, including its launcher app known as pixel launcher. However, you should be aware that once you download Lawnchair Launcher you can use it on any device provided that you are running at least a version of the 5.0 operating system. The Oreo launcher for any APK Lawnchair phone is already on Google Play after initially being distributed in storage by the likes of Github or XDA developers, although it is a beta that can be somewhat unstable. Either way, it's well worth taking a look at it because it intends to be one of the best Android launchers, and many are already comparing it to Nova Launcher. This app makes it much easier to customize our interface. This open source app includes various features and features of the most modern launcher applications available for Android, with a home screen that has undergone important changes against others such as Nougat. Here are its main features: Integration with Google Now. Android Oreo shortcuts and place to check out our our Support icon packets. Icon size configuration. The individual size of the grid. Customized dock. Adaptive icons. The ability to blur the interface. With Oreo, Android gives the user more freedom to customize the graphics environment, a much sought-after aspect due to the fact that we used to resort to third-party applications. The size of the icons, or what we choose to show or hide, is fully customizable. In general, if you want to see what Android 8.0 will look like on your phone, start downloading this app right away, bearing in mind what we mentioned earlier: it's an app that's still under development, and it may not work as well as you'd like.
