Kenmore 21202 is the main as they come. This affordable top loader doesn't offer the ability to wash bulky loads (or really any special cycles, for that matter), but consumer testers have found it easy to use, and we haven't had a problem with loading and unloading laundry from the spacious opening drum. Unfortunately, what you save in cash, you lose in performance, although Kenmore was gentle on our Test loads, it did not offer much in the way of cleaning prowess. Since innocuous refrigerators are the most egregious household energy guzzlers - they consume about 8 percent of household electricity, to be exact - I gave them a good amount of coverage (don't think you're out of the woods yet, washing machine). I reported on people giving their refrigerators a cold shoulder while living without them. The fridge-free existence is obviously not for everyone, so I've shared 10 simple ways to make your fridge more frosty and energy efficient, like cleaning coils and storing products wrapped and liquid covered. Here's a candidate for number 11, though it's more novel than simple. People over planet Green took on this interesting bit of energy-saving advice from Stephen and Rebecca Hren Carbon-free Home: 36 Remodeling Projects to Help Kick Fossil Fuel Habits. Isolate the look of your carpeted fridge. Well, not exactly. In the book, the authors Cover the outside of the fridge with an insulation floor. To take it up a notch, they recommend covering the insulation board with a carpet or cork. Here's how to do it in four simple steps. 1. Secure insulation board on the top and sides of the fridge. 2. Place a carpet or cork board over the panels. 3. Do not put insulation boards on the door. 4. Cover the door with carpet or cork. Voila! Here's a fluffy, energy efficient fridge. And since the green blogosphere works in happy ways, just yesterday Re-Nest listed 10 ways to reuse old carpet scraps. Has anyone tried this on their own?
