Stained Glass Transformation Worksheets Reply Key and Religious Stained GlassSHARE ON Twitter Facebook WhatsApp Pinterest How I'm About, Steven Glass is the worst journalism. I watched the movie and it was very good. I really enjoyed it, but as a journalist myself, I was cringing when I thought about how he used the system for shallow honors in a colorful story. Every writer wants to have glory in the newsroom... having a great story that everyone reads and talks about. But that's not what journalism is supposed to be about. For me glass activities go beyond the honesty and fairness of journalism. As writers, we have a serious responsibility to write factual stories without prejudice. For me, this is parallel to what we expect from doctors, police officers or firefighters. We expect them not only to be honest, but also to act in such a way that others will outpast their personal gain. We demand that they perform just every time. And if they fail, we journalists are keeping our feet on fire, demanding answers and speculation about what could have been and could have been done. As journalists, we should not expect anything less from ourselves. We are dependent on freedom of expression and screaming and shouting about injustice and hypocrisy in society; rarely do journalists turn against themselves cynical. Many would not fare well under the same scrutiny and standards that they kept for others. But the privilege of writing as journalists do is just that... privilege and we should hold it to as high a standard as we hold for others. We really don't know how Glass's actions affect journalism... this is not a news story to detail how various news organizations fact check their writers. I hope the folks in the industry had to review their procedures and adjust them accordingly. But, frankly, I doubt that this has happened. Everyone is too busy running to get that next big story that will be newsroom envy.
