Our customers want the invisible. They demand a unique image for their brand that no one has created before. This is the philosophy of Marmalade, a German production studio that is famous for capturing some of the most stunning, high-speed photography behind advertising. They create surreal images of the flow of milk chocolate colliding with dark chocolate in the air, or the perfect, effervescent beer hitting the frosty glass with all the force of the class five rapids of white water. Now, look. I know that this clip glorified the ad for their production services, but what an ad! It's like a wonderland for pictures of nerds, from their production room full of artificial cheeses, candy and fruit to their incredible industrial robot arm that tracks and pans shots as if it's building a performance car. You get a peek into the practical setup of some of the most advanced photography in the world. And before watching this clip? I'm ashamed to say I'd labeled about half the shots as CGI. See more here. (Hat tip: Smithsonian Institute) That's where I lose half my readership, or get half with you such prude and get on with the reality of hate mail: I don't think has a place in marriage. I don't think he has a place in a relationship. I think it demoralizes women and keeps true intimacy away. I bring this theme to this post where a young reader admits that she and her boyfriend watch together. She doesn't have a problem with that. Call me an old woman, but I'm concerned that she's not having sex with someone she's single while watching other people have sex. What is the big deal about? I'll tell you: 1. Real women can't live up to the false images on screens. How will they not end up being ashamed of their own very real flaws? We all have them. If you haven't already, you will. 2. Human people cannot expect to receive true arousal (and intimacy) when true perfection is in the field in front of them. Flat screens and big tits are much more attractive than 3D women with flat tits. And they don't want wives to talk about their children in surround sound when they can have models moaning more. 3. Regular media (as well as the industry) has put us all to failure: As McDonald's fries-laden sugar intake, appeals to many of our carnal instincts. (Nothing wrong with carnal instincts.) But instead of using these innate desires to build a relationship with another real life person, we use it as crack cocaine to make just feel good now. With the remote control, we felt we could control others We can stop and start something that gives us pleasure. We can turn it off when we're done. We can't do the same with relationships. It's too complicated. It's too dirty. can get hard and dirty too, but it's a lot easier to clean up post solo sex than than fight with the spouse or a protracted dispute about who should take out the garbage. Marriages can be terrible at times - no doubt. But if we don't run away from issues and we don't side tracked false images that mean nothing in our daily lives, we may face our head problems and heal. If only all of us, like this famous money shot, would put a magnifying glass on our own relationship. We would like to see in the bright, technicolor splendor of everything that is and does not work. In conclusion, I'm not slamming my young reader for watching with my boyfriend. Why does she think it's harmful? Society makes it very clear on a daily basis that being sexy, doing sexy and acting sexually is something that we should be happy about. The people that we should be happy with are people. Real people. Spouses who have flaws and baggage, but end up with heart and soul. With heart and soul comes the power to heal, the power to forgive, and the power to love. Now try to get that out of your boob tube. (Literally.) Thoughts about? Here's an interesting article on it. My husband washes in our house. Yes, it's sexier than blue video any day of the week. The upcoming study, published in the Eastern Economic Journal, shows that the rise of internet is one of the factors influencing men to delay marriage longer than guys in previous generations did. Researchers interviewed men about their online habits and found that men who watched online were less likely to marry than those who kept a clean search history. In fact, take two guys with different identical demographics, and a fan has a 6 percent bigger shot to be one. We're not arguing that this is a major causal factor in reducing marriage rates, says study author Michael Malcolm, PhD. Other factors are probably much more important, says Malcolm, such as the fact that more men and women get higher education than in the past, and prefer to delay marriage until their training is done. (Time to take the plunge? see if you can move on from you're ready for marriage? checklist.) But what is the link anyway? One theory is that smut is a source of sexual gratification that does not require the time and effort of a relationship to do. This may make the relationship less attractive to some The idea that optional sex can replace a relationship is not new, says Malcolm. Past research has shown that some men who hire prostitutes do so because it is easier than finding and caring for a partner. Viewing online is much less Obviously. It is also free and anonymous-like perks for visiting a store. (Is your habit normal, or get out of control? PornHub.com - one of the world's largest free sites - recently released quite a large amount of data, which lists three main search terms from each state. But before you start obsessing with the stats below, here are a few things worth noting: 1. When analyzing the top picks from each state, the two most popular search terms were teen and creampie. In fact, 31 of the 50 states were teenagers listed among their top three, while 29 of the 50 states were creamy in theirs. 2. Lesbian only popped up once in the results. (It was Arkansas No.2 search term.) The state that stayed included in PornHub the longest was Mississippi (average visit duration: 11 minutes and 59 seconds), while Rhode Island was the shortest (10 minutes). 4. Some of these search terms are definitely sent to me by Google/Urban Dictionary looking for answers. So to save you from trouble: Hentai usually consists of Japanese anime and Anita the queen is the star of adult movies. As for Wyoming's most popular search term, smoking? Well, I can only assume that the footage is related to cigarettes and sex. See the map below to see the number 1 each state choose, and if you're looking for a full report, check out the interactive tools from PornHub. (And yes, they're safe to work with, I promise!) The brains of those who watch sex are similar to those who have it. floods your body with the bonding hormone oxytocin, which is a chemical that turns you into a repeat client. The average person is said to gain 40 minutes a week. It's far from us to say whether this is realistic On up pressing play increases your breathing speed and blood pressure - among other things, of course. As your muscles relax, blood is redirected below the waist, but your penis is not the only organ in the game. Areas of the brain associated with and the reward lights up. These are areas that are stimulated when presented with everything you get illegal high from, whether it's drugs or dessert. Get pumped When your wrap session, the brain releases a brain mixture of prolactin and vasopressin chemicals. That's the reason you hit the pillow hard after orgasm. But it can also be the perfect time for different types of session: erotic movies cause spikes in testosterone that can improve your squat strength in the gym, says the British Sports Council. Consider it pre-workout with less about tingling. High precision also pumps out the pleasure of chemical dopamine. (Shocker!) Its purpose, Explains Prause, is to form positive associations by telling the brain: We must do it again. But this, in turn, can provoke a mixed emotional state. If you feel guilty, chalk it up to social stigma - it's not necessarily a reflection on your partner. In fact, studies have shown that married users are less likely to cheat. Happy Ending While Watching has the potential to lift your spirits, XXX doesn't always mark the place - especially if your solo work supersedes the IRL relationship. Brigham Young Uni's research linked excessive viewing to anxiety and compulsive behavior. There's no safe upper limit, says Prause, though she advises capping your habits for two hours a week.
