Authorities say the marriage may have spread the coronavirus throughout Sydney.David Moyes said he had to be very careful in bringing Michail Antonio back from injury after the West Ham striker's return against Southampton. Antonio has been troubled by a hamstring problem since October but he was sent off for the final 15 minutes as the Hammers drew 0-0 on the south coast on Tuesday night. Having brought the 30-year-old back against Aston Villa earlier this month only to lose him again soon after, Moyes said he had to be steady in building Antonio's workload. (Bloomberg) -- VMware Inc. said that one of its former executives, Rajiv Ramaswami, violated his contractual obligations when he was named chief executive officer of rival Nutanix Inc., adding another dimension to the bitter rivalry between the two software makers. VMware's lawsuit against Ramaswami, who was named CEO on December 9, was filed Monday in California state court in San Jose. The company accused the former chief operating officer of cloud products and services of meeting with Nutanix executives and board members while helping VMware strategize and acquire roadmaps. VMware, majority owned by Dell Technologies Inc., said executive actions and knowledge of its plans have led to irreparable injuries. Nutanix, who was not named as a defendant in the lawsuit, called the case misguided and said it was VMware's attempt to hurt competitors. We were unable to shed the bell of conflict that existed during that two-month period that he engaged with Nutanix while involved in planning for us, Brooks Beard, VMware's vice president and deputy general counsel, said in an interview. Through this lawsuit, we hope that we can find a way to protect VMware's rights and interests, the steps we will take, could have been taken, had he warned us about this conflict. Palo, an Alto-based software maker, may seek to regain its compensation to Ramaswami over a period of time and wants to engage meaningfully with its executives and new employers to ensure they will not use confidential VMware information to make competitive decisions, Beard added. San Jose, California-based Nutanix, in a blog post Monday, said the company and its new CEO had done nothing wrong. Nutanix and Mr. Ramaswami assured VMware that Mr. Ramaswami agreed with his obligation not to take or misuse classified information, and VMware did not argue otherwise, Nutanix said Tuesday when changing the post. However, VMware requested that Mr. Ramaswami agree to limit the ordinary of its job duties in a way that would be tedilike to an illegal noncompetition agreement, and it requested that Nutanix agree not to hire candidates from VMware in a way that Nutanix said would be contrary to federal antitrust laws. VMware and Nutanix compete in network, cloud cloud and hybrid-cloud markets. Corporate competition erupted in a public fracas in 2019 after Nutanix launched a campaign called Decide that VMware found vitriolic. Former Nutanix CEO Dheeraj Pandey wrote a blog post titled, Stop being a bully, VMware, in which he compared his battle against the company to the civil rights struggle in the US, the American Revolution, and the Indian movement for independence from the United Kingdom.VMware accused Ramaswami, who spent more than four years at the company, of violating contractual agreements, loyalty duties, fiduciary duties as well as unfair competition. The company said that one month before the executive left his job, he downloaded 2,200 files from his VMware computer to a private hard-drive without VMware's knowledge or consent. Ramaswami said the files were private, which the company argued was further evidence that he knew in advance that he would leave a copy of VMware.A from the complaint provided by VMware. That could not be immediately confirmed in electronic court records. (Update with complaint details in the final pargraph.) (Bloomberg) -- Oil issued gains as prospects for greater U.S. aid checks dissipated, taming hopes for a short-term recovery and a battering equity market. Futures in New York closed 0.8% higher on Tuesday amid thin liquidity. Senate Republicans on Tuesday blocked Democratic efforts to increase direct stimulus payments in the newly enacted Covid-19 aid bill from $600 to $2,000.Higher stimulus checks could refresh oil demand, said Bob Yawger, head of the futures division at Mizuho Securities. Without additional stimulus, it could be another drag on oil demand. That's what's ruining oil futures right now. Benchmark U.S. crude futures have risen nearly 6 percent so far this month amid optimism surrounding the development of the Covid-19 vaccine, but the launch timeline is faltering.
