FOLLOW US I love the game, but it gets expensive to play. Unless you have the patience of Job, after getting stuck at a level for days, you will be tempted to buy coins or raises to pass the level when you repeatedly get started to need only one to two moves to beat the level. I've been playing this game for years and in that time I've spent hundreds of dollars as this scenario happens over and over again. One to two medium skill levels will be followed by a hard level that is virtually impossible given the number of allocated moves. I understand that game developers should be paid for their labor and creativity. I'm a software developer myself, so I support that. But knowing that there is no such thing as really random logic in games, I know the levels are deliberately set to entice $$ to be spent. Just it seems as if the developers can set a switch once a player has spent a large amount so that they can win hard levels after a large number of failed attempts, say 50, and allow the now impoverished player who loves the game to keep moving. For purchased games, there is a limit to the expenses required of the player. Not so with free apps. I forced myself to stop paying to play this game.
