More Dragon Age Wiki Edit Share The Dawn Will Come is a Chantry anthem performed by Mother Giselle to comfort the Inquisitor and inspire the Inquisition after he leaves Haven before finding Skyhold. Leliana and Cullen join, along with many others, until the entire Inquisition joins the encouraging song. Lyrics (edited by editing) Shadows are falling and hope of running steel Your Heart Dawn will come Night Long And the way a dark look into the sky One day soon dawn will come the shepherd lost And his house far Keep to the Stars Dawn will come Night Long And the way a dark look into the sky One day soon dawn will come Naked Blade and raise it high Stand on his land Dawn will come The Night long And the way dark the sky will come. As performed by Giselle's mother, et al. Notes edit the source of editing Community Content is available under CC-BY-SA, unless stated otherwise. More Dragon Age Vicky Sorry! I especially love the Dragon Age: Origins soundtrack, but I've listened to scores from both Dragon Age II and Dragon Age: Inquisition. However, one of the most memorable pieces of music of them all comes from the last entry in the franchise, and features characters suddenly crashing into a song and singing Dawn will come. The song appears at a crucial moment in the Inquisition. The moment this happens, you and your group have just suffered at the hands of the game's antagonist, and were forced to leave their base of operations. Things Things Looking somber as you are all in an impromptu camp together, when suddenly one of the characters, Mother Giselle, starts singing what you can assume is a song from Chantry, the religious band in the game. I was definitely surprised when she started singing in an attempt to cheer up my character and others, but what was even more shocking and enjoyable was when characters from other Dragon Age games joined in in Slow, characters such as Leliana and Cullen chimes into the song. Seeing everyone come together solidifies how much everyone in your group is in the same situation and ready to face it all together. Some may find a scene and song like this rather cheesy, and say it's not necessary for the characters you know to join so loudly. However, I was pleasantly surprised at how much it felt like a very encouraging and inspiring melody to hear at that moment. It was in the right place and I love that they were trying to do something different. These fears, however, are apparently shared by one of the cinematic designers who worked on the game, Robert Boisvert. He commented on the video of the song, saying that he was responsible for the presentation of the scene, and noted that the comments about this moment meant a lot to him. Within months of this scene being completed I was stressed and concerned that the scene was going to fall flat, was too banal, or just wasn't going to hit the mark. Hearing all you say the opposite is really comforting and I'm grateful for that,' he wrote. It's definitely one of the most memorable moments and pieces of music in the game, and my favorite, which shows how the Inquisition stands out in the Dragon Age series from its predecessors.
