i: Organizations, cults, daughters of artemis share the banner of the daughters of Artemis Daughters artemis, also called Huntresses of Artemis[1], was a tribal community of female warriors who worshipped Artemis, the Greek goddess of hunting and moon. The daughters of Artemis saw themselves as protectors of the country's flora and fauna and made use of animals such as bear and wolf to protect it. They were also skilled archers. [2] Description The daughters of Artemis are strong here. Kassandra in Mal[scr] The Daughters of Artemis favored hunting camps that lie deep in the forest or near places sacred to Artemis. Occasionally, these camps became larger settlements, most notable among them being their original home to Huntress Village on the island of Chios, and the village of Lamia in Malis. [2] The emblem of the Daughters of Artemis was a stylized figure of a woman who drew a bow, presumably a depiction of Artemis. They wore fur and animal skins, and often had painted red markings on their skin. [2] For the daughters of Artemis, the Hind of Keryneia was a sacred creature. [3] The daughters seemed to favor staying out of the Peloponnesian War and adhered to their settlements and wilderness. However, they were known to harass the ordinary people, usually by dropping the latter's animals, but also by threatening those who hunted in their forests. They also sometimes disrupted religious practices or simply destroyed statues and shrines. [4] History In 431 f.Kr. Daphnae, the leader of daughters at the time, was tasked with hunting several legendary creatures found throughout Greece. [5] Daphnae later revealed that this process was to test a new candidate to lead daughters of Artemis; It would culminate in the challenger and the ruling leader fighting to the death. The winner would be the leader of Daughters, until another challenger arose. [6] After this duel, with Kassandra as the victor, the daughters promised to her, and some of them joined the crew of her ship, Adrestia. Assassin's Creed: Odyssey Daughters of Artemis and Daughters of Aphrodite was a virtual representation of one of Kassandra's genetic memories, relived by Layla Hassan through Portable Animus Description A rebel faction of the Daughters of Artemis made the camp near Lalaia. Kassandra ventured there to examine his intentions and seek help for the endangered village. Dialogue After becoming the leader of the Daughters of Artemis, Kassandra learned of a group of daughters who had rebelled against her leadership accidentally near Lalaia, who needed skilled warriors to defend it. She made her way to the Forest Camp to negotiate. The daughters returned their greeting with a somewhat hostile look. Kassandra: The traditional welcome of the Daughters of Artemis. Abrota: You are Eagle Bearer, Messenger of Zeus, and leader of Daughters of Artemis? Kassandra: I've come to ask for your help. The nearby village is under siege by Xerxes's sons. We followed Daphnae. We don't follow you. You're a raw and a crook. Great leaders are measured not by the piles of the body at their feet, but by the help they give others. Kassandra: Without the sword and spear of my grandfather, King Leonidas, this coast would belong to the Persians. Great leaders protect us from invasion, no matter the price in blood. Kassandra: A selfish leader helps people in their time of need. Abrota: A great leader always kept us in meat and shelter. You kill animals for trophies. Like the god you fight for, you're selfish. Why should we trust you? Kassandra: If Artemis found me unworthy, I would not have come back with the pelts of nemean lion or kallisto bear. If anything, this proves me more Artemis' master than Zeus'. Kassandra: I grew up with nothing and have not forgotten the pain of hunger. I'll take what I need and no more. Abrota: Why do you care about this village, and why do you expect our sympathy? What do we stand to profit from this? Kassandra: This forest can provide you with food and shelter for now, but you won't be able to fend off Xerxes for too long. You need those resources. Kassandra: The women of Lalaia have food and shelter, but are not prepared to defend themselves against raiding bandits. An alliance benefits both of you. Abrota considered Kassandra's response. Abrota: Power radiates you in the same way as daphnae. I can see why you're carrying her title. If you can get me and my best warrior to give in, my bow and sisters are yours. Abrota: I'm surprised by your compassion, Hero, and start to see what Daphnae saw in you. Yet I do not submit to any leader who cannot defeat me and my best warrior in battle. If you can get me on my back, I'll bend over. Only then. Abrota: Telesilla, come with me! The two women attacked Kassandra, but she quickly defeated them. Abrota: I'm giving in! You've proved yourself worthy of your titles. My warriors and I are yours. You fought well. You know the direction of Yes? Abrota: Of course. We collect our things and go with you there. Kassandra: I expect to see you defend Lalaia when Sons of Xerxes attacks. Yes, master. If this is the last of the three missions completed: Kassandra: I have done everything I can for these women. Time to get back to Perikione. Outcome Kassandra owed Abrota and Telesilla, earned the loyalty of the camp's daughters of Artemis and recruited them in defense of Lalaia. Trivia This mission is only available if the player has taken over the management of the Daughters of Artemis by killing Daphnae at the end of Artemis's request. In connection with Abrota's final statement, the first dialogue choices are decidedly confident in the tone, and the other dialogue choices are decidedly compassionate.
