Contracts. For example, it appears to be a common phrase, such as a notification contained in this Agreement. When a contract is cancelled, it is usually required that the party cancel the contract to send a written notice to the other party. There is a provision called the Clause Notice, which determines how the notification should be made and when the notice reaches the other party. In this paragraph of notification, the terms of notification scheduled for this Agreement should be made as follows may be displayed in the English contract by the term notice controlled by the Agreement previously. In addition, contemplation may appear in NGOs (Confidentiality Agreement), etc. For example... Products converted by Confidential Information... (products expected to be confidential) and so on. This expression is used to indicate that even if a confidentiality agreement is concluded, it will not prevent the development of competing products, etc., expected of confidential information, unless the recipient of the information violates the confidentiality agreement. Such content is often ed those of this content because disclosure of confidential information does not prevent a company from developing similar or competing products. To contemplate is not a very important term, but other expressions often appear in English contracts, so it is a good idea to keep the meaning down. Index English Contract Terminology is here.
