History and tradition of jazz pdf

PHOTO BY CHI-CHI ARI PHOTOGRAPHY The perfect jazz tune can take you into a world of sweet, sophisticated romance. It's the perfect genre of music to set the mood. There's something about flickering keys, or chasing horns and shuffling percussion that evokes nostalgia that's undeniable. The jazz standards of Nat King Cole, Billie Holiday and Chet Baker are timeless classics. Modern takes on the old Harry Connick Jr classic a fun throw in the mix along with new original jazz songs by Esperanza Spalding and Nora Jones will be the highlight of any cocktail hour or dinner playlist. Here are the top 50 best jazz love songs to play at your wedding. 01 of 50 Lyrics About Love: A Very Thought of You Makes My Heart Sing / Like an April Breeze on the Wings of Spring 02 of 50 Lyrics Of Love: And So Everything Else Above / I Dream of a Man I Love 03 out of 50 LyricS No More Love / Than What I Feel For You 04 of 50 Lyrics About Love: And I Would Like to Know that's more than love at first sight / I want a Sunday Kind of Love 05 of 50 Love Lyrics Lyrics: Who Loves You, Sweetheart / And Tell Me Who Thinks Of You a Million Times a Day 06 of 50 Love Lyrics: Dawn Is Near Time Fleeting / Mind If I Take Love To You 07 of 50 Love Lyrics A: It's very clear our love is here to stay / Not for a year, but ever and day 08 of 50 Love Lyrics: I find something more to love in you / And that's how it was right from the day you came my way 09 out of 50 Love Lyrics: I love the look of you, seduce you / Sweet of you, Pure of you 10 out of 50 Lyrics About Love: It amazes me, it just amazes me / What it sees in me dazzles me 11 out of 50 Love Songs Texts: It's a great time for love / Shines on top of 12 of 50 Love Lyrics: I fall in love too easily / I fall in love too quickly 13 out of 50 Lyrics of Love: And when it comes my way / I'll make it all possible to make it stay 14 out of 50 Lyrics about love: So while there's music and moonlight and love and romance / Let's face the music and dance 1 5 out of 50 Love Song Lyrics: When you're in my arms and I feel like you're so close to me / All my wildest dreams come true 16 of 50 Love Lyrics: Two in Love Can Do It, Take my heart and please don't break it / Love was made for me and you 17 out of 50 Texts of Love: Just say you love me / And we'll go to the preacher 18 of 50 Love Song Lyrics: Haven't we sail away for a little nap / And settle high on the crest of thrills? Real-time improvisation is an adrenaline rush like no other. Spontaneous creativity in real time. In moments of drama, suspense and intensity are hotter than the issue of a charged political race or a summer blockbuster. With less than 1% of the notes on the writing page, we jazz musicians have to do it as we go. It's real-time art - not going to come back to correct mistakes or rethink the passage. The pressure is huge, but so much excitement. Sounds like the current hyper-competitive business environment, doesn't it? To win today, you and your team must function more like a liquid jazz band than a tightly controlled orchestra. You have to constantly reinvent your work and look for fresh, new approaches. Responsible risk and originality now trump compliance and rigidity. Like jazz, business success is often determined by creativity and original thought, not just technical prowess. Jazz and business legends remember what they create, how they change the world. Here are four ways to make your company look more like a jazz combo: Encourage risk. Jazz musicians who play safely rarely find concerts. The same can be said of you and your company. If you don't make mistakes at least 10% of the time, you don't risk enough. Be great. The audience does not remember the technical competence. They remember a musician who dares to be different. Our world is full of the sameness, and none of your clients need another me-too solution. Let everyone shine. At a jazz concert, every musician is in the spotlight. This allows the best ideas to flow and makes for a very active team. Give each person in your group autonomy and space for creative expression, and you will build a stronger, more innovative team. Mix it and keep it fresh. Jazz musicians are known for never being made before. They are constantly trying new things and new combinations. In your world, move tables around. Try a job sharing program and give people new projects to develop. Organize a tour for inspiration. Shake things up, take changes and avoid repetitive ruts. As commercialization, cost-cutting and the global workforce continue to undermine the competitive advantage, you must create in order to win. The ability of a jazz musician to improvise, take risks, adapt to change and create new lands is the same skills that we should all develop in our current bureaucratic economy. To really make a difference in your company, think of your business as a blank slate of music and unleash your inner jazz cat. This is your opportunity for creative expression. It's yours. Jam. You know that feeling. You dismiss what seems like a million job applications and then wait for weeks and don't get a single response. It's a utterly depressing experience, but a few somewhat One. There are always factors that you can't control, but your resume and the skills you bring are two that you can. Here's how to move your job statement from forgetful to memorable. Whether or not to love them, recruiters play a key role in the job market. If you're unlucky with cold apps, identify some recruiters in your niche (whether it's LinkedIn, your contacts or network events), explain what you're looking for opportunities, and articulate what you can bring to the table. Not many recruiters will respond to strangers who ask for renewal, but if they have a vacancy to fill (and you present yourself as a possible candidate), they will most likely come back to you. Since then, you can follow specific questions. Ask what skills you should be including in your resume, but are not, or what skills you currently don't have, but need for you to move on to the next step. If you run to last, figure out how you can get that training. What if you still can't get a recruiter? Try to connect with people who are in the role you want and get their input. Chances are, after hearing about their experiences and skills, you could determine what prevents you from landing that dream role. Related: It's LinkedIn InMails that get the highest response rate: Optimize the top half of your resumeRecruiters to spend a few seconds scanning the top of your resume when they open it, and then decide whether they will invest more time in reading. That's why it pays to focus on content above the times of your resume (part visible without scrolling down) to make sure the hooks the attention of recruiters in those first vital seconds. Start by stripping out any cliches or general skills such as teamwork or communication from your profile. This is the premise of most jobs and will not surprise anyone. Instead, pack the top of your resume with the demand for industry skills and knowledge that reflect the needs of your target employers. Consider adding a resume of basic bullet skills to your profile if you haven't already done so to ensure that your most valuable attributes jump off the page and don't go unnoticed. Perhaps the most common problem that recruiters face is the sheer volume of applications they receive for advertised roles. From your point of view, this may seem like a good problem to have. But having to screen each of these resumes is a significant drain of time, and unfortunately if you don't rationalize the top half of your resume, it won't always get the attention it deserves. Related: Here's exactly what put on your resume to land interview pitch Or describe your impactA lot of resumes look similar, even if the candidates behind them are very different. The problem is that many applicants just list their skills and qualifications, which they often share with thousands of other people. If you are applying for a role that requires sales, negotiation, technology and account management skills, you can be sure that there will be competing candidates who also have those skills. The results separate the mediocre candidate from the great. So when you write your role descriptions, don't just list your responsibilities and skills. Expand further to demonstrate the impact of your actions on others. For example, instead of writing Identifying potential customers, networking and building relationships, write Identify and Networking with perspectives in order to generate more than 30 new high-value customer leads this year, and five registrations that resulted in more than $250K in sales revenue. It's easy to see how this will make you stand out miles above those candidates who just list skills. You tell the recruiter exactly how you have succeeded in your previous role, demonstrating what you can potentially bring to the vacancy they are trying to fill. This makes their work easier.
