They are looking for simple details that have a big impact, explains the stylist. This much is evident in the actress' latest formal get, from the celebration of Bulgari in Italy: a black Dior tulle dress, adorned with a spider-inspired necklace from a jewelry brand. Harrier's last look from Spider-Man's press tour was perhaps the most spectacular: immersion Calvin Klein Klein velvet dress To wear Raf Simons' bespoke label to the film's world premiere, Nahmani says: was our number one goal from day one.... If there was a way for us to make this happen, it was something we really, really knew would be the perfect ending for everything. The stylist believes that Harrier's appearance at the inaugural Calvin Klein Simons show game-changing moment in his client's sartorial record, so to close months of red carpets, photo calls, and panels with the brand will represent the perfect ending. So began a two-month process to find the right dress. This was presented to us as the first option and we said: This dress , Nahmani recalls. The big element for us was making sure she had a movie star moment to really stand out on the red carpet. Red, silhouette and velvet proved to be the spectacular combination they sought. Nahmani calls Nicolas Ghesquiere of Louis Vuitton another cherished collaborator. Laura has worked incredibly closely with him for the past six months, she explains. The actress traveled from Paris to Kyoto to attend his show, so it was only fitting that his clean, edgy design made it to the Spider-Man press tour. Nahmani landed on a square white suit Harrier wore to a New York screening of the film because it's a classic Ghesquiere. Also, there's a connection to her final Calvin Klein-by-destination look: She had these bold shoulders (on both) - it shows the power that I felt was important to close the tour with. Sometimes referred to as beagles on steroids, Harriers are active, medium sized dogs that were originally bred to hunt hares and foxes in large hunting parties. Although they are much rarer today, Harriers have a long history of both hunting and working dogs. Today, it is rare to find Harriers in shelters, or even from breeders. In fact, Harrier is one of the rarest breeds to be recognized by the American Kennel Club. Despite its smaller size, Harriers are not suitable for apartments if owners are willing to devote a few hours each day to outdoor exercise. What's more, Harriers are not recommended for first-time dog owners because of their stubbornness and difficulty in the home and obedience to the train. Some believe harriers originated in France-Harrier is the Norman French word for dog or dog - and were descendants of Bloodhounds, Talbot Hounds, or Bassett Hounds, all of which originated in France and Belgium. Others believe they originated in England, where harrier-type dogs first began to appear in hunting flocks around 1260. Regardless of their country of origin, it is widely accepted that the Harriers were originally bred to hunt the hare. Early hare hunting was done on foot, so the first harriers moved much slower and strategically than today's Harriers. As soon as the hunters began to hunt horses, the Harriers developed much more speed and agility to keep up. There are records of Harriers arriving in North America sometime during the 1700s, but they have never gained great popularity among American families or hunters. Despite the fact that one of the first breeds was recognized by the American Kennel Club, within 110 years only 949 harriers were registered. Today, most Harriers are kept as family companions or For hunting game types that are too fast for Beagles to catch. Image copyright Fine Art/Heritage Images/Getty Images Featuring their coarse and rough origins, the sleek, shiny Harriers coats require minimal care and maintenance. Cleaning your Harrier with a soft bristles brush or dog glove once a week will remove Garbage, and loose hair, and keep your coat and skin harrier healthy. You can expect to bathe your Harrier every few months. Typically, Harrier nails will be worn down naturally, but examine them every few weeks and trim as needed. This will keep your dog's paws healthy and your feet and furniture scratch free. Like many hounds, learning Harrier can be challenging, they are stubborn independent thinkers who tend to do what they choose. While training, it is important to make your Harrier interested and engaged, as they can become boring easily. Be sure to use techniques that make your Harrier think that docile is their idea, and use positive reinforcement consistently. It is recommended that Harriers attend obedience training between the ages of nine weeks and six months to ensure proper socialization and consistent training. Harriers are great with kids and other dogs- they are a vaiko-dog, after all, but usually should stay away from other small pets like cats, homies, rabbits and birds. Harriers prey on dogs and may consider these other animals prey. Because Harriers are very high energy, they have high training needs. They are not suitable for people who live in apartments if owners have access to a large fenced area for their Harrier to run around. As Harriers age, their training needs will change: Puppies must get about 30 to 45 minutes of playtime each day, while adult Harriers need over an hour of running, playtime, or other activities. Harriers can easily get bored, so it is important to release their excess energy. Otherwise, it can lead to destructive behavior caused by boredom. Like all breeds or mixed breeds, harriers may be susceptible to certain health conditions. Not every Harrier will develop health problems, but it is important to know what to do if these conditions develop in your dog. Some common health conditions among harriers include: hip or elbow dysplasia, which can lead to instability, weakness, and joint pain. It is a hereditary condition, but can be worsened by rapid growth due to weight gain or injury. Hypothyroidism, an endocrine disorder that reduces the rate of metabolism of the dog and can lead to canine obesity, diabetes and heart disease. Ethical, reputable breeders do their best to make sure they produce healthy dogs that adhere to the highest standards of breed, but this is not a guarantee for ideal health. Be sure to talk to your veterinarian about keeping your Harrier healthy, and steps you can take to reduce the risk of developing certain Your dog's diet largely depends on his age, weight, activity level and metabolism, but it is generally recommended that adult harriers eat between 1.5 and 2 cups of high-quality, low-grain, dry dog food divided into twice a day, while puppies eat up to 4 cups divided into three meals. Harriers Harriers look muscular, and have a visible waist looking at it. When you run your hands down the sides, you should be able to feel (but don't see) his ribs. If you are concerned that your Harrier has gained too much weight, or you are unsure how much they should eat and exercise each day, talk to your veterinarian. She will be able to recommend a nutrition plan set up for your dog. Because they are rare in the United States, you are unlikely to find Harrier at a local shelter. If you are using a breeder, be sure to do your research and find an ethical Harrier breeder in your area. Ask the breeder a lot of questions about their breeding methods and try to meet with the parents of litters. Harriers are high-energy dogs that can be challenging to learn, so it is important to do your research and make sure that Harrier will fit your family home, schedule, and lifestyle before you bring him home.
