In the tradition of the Methodist Church, bishops preside over two types of church conferences, each year and central. These terms refer to different regional conferences. At these conferences, bishops set the direction of the UMC and focused its current mission. Any UMC bishop, wless in office or retirement, included in UMC Council of Bishops, meets semi-annually. A UMC bishop is to tour a church superintendent and serve as administrator of the conferences. Unlike bishops in the Roman Catholic Church, the UMC bishops are not ordained but elected. UMC members of these cleaving members are elected by fellow clember members at one of the five UMC regional conferences. Also known as jurisdictional conferences, are held every four years. Outside the United States, regional conferences are referred to as central conferences, and bishops are also selected by Creole members. The UMC lists seven central conferences such as in 2012, in Africa, Central and Southern Europe, Congo, Germany, NoRthern Europe, the Philippines, and West Africa. Once elected, bishops have served for a four-year term in a designated jurisdiction. Dedication takes place at the conference, with all bishops required to report the new jurisdiction on September 1. A new bishop cannot serve a jurisdiction in he previously served as member of the property until his first four-year term. A broad responsibility for UMC bishops ensures regulations and regulations passed by the UMC General Conference are put in place and carried forward. Every four years, the General Conference goes to all Bishops's councils, and its decisions speak for the entire UMC. The bishop sets all appointments of clergy at his regional conference, and also serves as the president's officer at the conference each year. These are the conferences every year, usually held in the spring, for specific geographic areas. In that position, he must rule out all the points of law brought into the conference sessions. The bishop usually serves as the chairman of a UMC General Agency board. Bishops oversee UMC's spiritual interests as well as the church's practices needs. The bishop describes the priorities for congregations in his jurisdiction, supervised program administration and work with other organizations within the jurisdiction. These organizations may include hospitals and other health care facilities, prison ministries, interface associations, food banks, homeless shelters, substance abuse tips or other missions. The bishop sets the direction of focusing on particular missions in jurisdiction during his term in office. Bishops elected at a U.S. regional conference usually serve up to two terms in a specific jurisdiction. A bishop, elected for life, serves until retirement, which begins as conference after the year in which he turned 68. Bishops elected at the central conference serve for designated terms, and if they do not constitute the loss of a bishop and return to critical members. If retiring during the term of office, the bishop has life status. About the author Jane Meggitt has been a writer for more than 20 years.
