Anniversaries: From a Year in the Life of Gesine Cresspahl (German: Jahrestage 1-4: Aus dem Leben von Gesine Cresspahl) is a tetralogy of Uwe Johnson's novels, started in 1970, with further volumes published in 1971, 1973 and finally in 1983. The main character, Gesin Cresspal, a German single mother in Manhattan, and we have been following her life since childhood in 1930s in rural eastern Germany during the rise of Nazism, through World War II, the Soviet occupation, the creation of the GDR and the beginning of the Cold War, and then its exile to New York. Eventually, she decides to return to Europe and goes to Prague, unaware that Soviet tanks occupied the city and laid the Prague Spring. The novel consists of 366 short sections, one for each day of the year, from August 1967 to August 1968, although it bears very little resemblance to a series of diary entries. The narrative moves between past and present, and often shifts quickly from first to third person. Most sections include news reports, as Gezin reads them in the New York Times every day on the subway. Translations Of Ieila Vennewitz's Abbreviated Translation was published in 1987. The full translation of Damion Searles was published by the New York Review of Books in 2018 and released in a two-volume single. The reception of The 2018 translation by Damion Searles was met with great critical acclaim, although most reviews noted the sheer volume of work made it difficult to read. Jonathan Steinberg, a reviewer for The Spectator, called the novel an amazing achievement. Anthony Cummins, writing in The Guardian, praised it as a monumental work and suggested it could be the novel of the year. (5) praised it as a novel vaulting formal ambition. Parula Segal's review for The New York Times was warmer in the novel, calling it painful. Extracted from The Book of These aims to be a comprehensive account of the 60s, commenting on media coverage of Vietnam, housing segregation in Manhattan, Prague Spring. At almost 1,700 pages, it's oceanic, and it's a masterpiece. -Parul Sehgal, The New York Times, Times Critics' Top Books of 2019 (Anniversaries) requires a hard chair, a fresh handle and your full attention- for attention is its big topic . . . Searles's excellent translation inscribed Johnson's anxiety and probing in the choice of words and the structure of the sentences themselves, which tremble with anxiety to get everything right to see world as it is. -Parul Sehgal, The New York Times Juxtaposing the noise of 60s America with everyday life in Nazi Germany, anniversaries chronicles 20th-century upheaval through the eyes of Gesin Cresspal, who leaves postwar Monchengladbach to raise her young daughter, Marie, on New York's Upper West Side. . Against the background of the big picture we get a fine-grained attitude to motherhood and migration... It feels thrillingly spontaneous, almost out of control. You can certainly understand why it's not all translated so far. But here it is: the novel of the year, perhaps the novel of the year. - Anthony Cummins, Observer Uwe Johnson's Anniversaries book live in: two volumes and more than 1,700 pages of a receptacle universe, reliably imagined and richly populated. Its streets are long and its attractions are varied. Sometimes the weather is sultry and sometimes the pipes clang in the cold. But Johnson's rhythm is always patient, always mesmerizingly meticulous... Johnson's observations do have a peculiar, sprawling omniscience. His opus belongs in the canon of encyclopedic, modernist German-language volumes such as Berlin Alexanderplatz and Man without qualities, and he allows himself divagia on everything from the predominance of yellow in the American visual landscape to the intricacies of Hungarian politics. . . His letter is inhumane, godlike in its unsize. -Becca Rothfeld, Bookforum Johnson's Book actually gives the reader forty or fifty years of world history and one year of Gezin's life, every day from August 21, 1967 to August 20th, 1968. Its scale is astounding, from the social organization of a small German town, to Gezin's job at a New York bank, to her father's work as a master carpenter, doing business in Richmond, London. - Tom Sutcliffe, Saturday Review, BBC Radio 4 I am absolutely stunned and a little disappointed that I have never heard of this book before. . . I think it's extraordinary, I think it's a great late modern masterpiece. . . How to compare Germany in 1933 with Vietnam? But, he does it, he does it in the first paragraph. It must be clumsy or absurd or just a little awkward, but it does it brilliantly. It has the whole world... I've been completely gripped, and there are none of the usual narrative handrails, no romantic relationships, you're never quite sure why she's the one who's the father of the baby - all these props aren't available to us, and so far it's totally extraordinary. - Catherine Hughes, Saturday Review, BBC Radio 4 European modernists used the novel as a means of metropolitan mapping experience. From James Joyce, perpetuating expensive, dirty Dublin in Ulysses, to The Dirty City Paean berlin by Alfred Doblin to Robert Musil's elegy for Imperial Vienna's Man Without Qualities, the city was no longer just a decorative struggle, but a joint opportunity, the perfect vessel for consciousness. Uwe Johnson Anniversaries: From the year in the life of Gesin Cresspal, a sprawling novel about an East German immigrant and her 10-year-old daughter as they move life on New York's Upper West Side, is a natural heir to that tradition. - Dustin Illingworth, Atlantic Likened to Ulysses Joyce, this is really a kind of Joseph Cornell box in words, a huge montage stretching from August 1967 to August 1968. The narrator, Gesin Cresspal, lives in exile on the Upper West Side, working as a translator, trying to raise a daughter, Mane, herself. Her diary, that is Johnson's 2,000-page novel, touches on Vietnam, World War II, postwar Eastern Europe, the inhumane conditions of this New York subway system and the humanity of its riders, the triumph of despair and countless other topics. A rich book to be read slowly and thoughtfully, from a writer who is too little known today. -Kirkus ReviewsIn this vast multivolume novel, the events of one woman's life during the year in New York return to German history and political upheaval for several decades. . . The growing political consciousness of Gezin's daughter, Marie, provides a wonderful counterpoint to the novel's themes of personal, national and global crises. It is an obsessive and unforgettable portrait of the momentous and historical. - Publishers Weekly This book is truly a masterpiece. . . It's a record, and enduring for our entire post-Hitler era. You've really made this past tangible and perhaps a much more difficult task - you've made it compelling. Now I know how it was and is there - I know it to the tips of my toes. . . This seems to be the only appropriate way to talk and think: about a great-grandmother, a mother and a child, in the interaction of generations and on two continents. - Hannah Arendt, February 7, 1972, letter to Uwe Johnson Anniversaries: From the year in life gesin Cresspal lives to deception. In my reading so far, it's closely observed, utterly impulsive and resonant with a meaning of about a year I remember well, and I can't wait to finish it, although I admit that it will take some time. Bonus for me local-Gesine lived in 14 blocks south of where I live now, but Johnson writing invites everyone into their wealth. - Barbara Hofferit, library magazine Uwe Johnson is the most incorruptible writer I've ever read, always looking for what we so frivolously call the truth. In anniversaries he approaches this fundamental thing, however, from different sides, on different continents, in time. Page by page, we're shown we must clearly, without prejudice, think correctly. Page by page, thinking with Johnson offers us the greatest pleasure. - Jenny Erpenbeck is a fascinating, complex, very significant work in which the author displays not only his skill as a narrator, but also his humor, irony and descriptive power. - The New York Times Johnson has Balzac's passion for eloquent detail, revealing precision; here is a passion that is driven by the imagination of love. So intensely the figure of herself-Gesine and her daughter, the desalized mother of Gesine, and all the tribe of Baltic relatives who differently tolerate and confront the Nazi calamity that manhattan's ballast fact is needed to keep the book on the page, life in the spotlight to keep the agony from getting out of drawing. -Richard Howard. Bear with it a strong personal recommendation from one of the more demanding readers I know -Luke Sante-and promis'es something like the dive I've craved since the end of Robert Musil's Man Without Qualities. -Jonathan Letham, Los Angeles Times Uwe Johnson (1934-1984) grew up in the small town of Anklam in the German state of Mecklenburg. At the end of World War II, his father, who joined the Nazi Party in 1940, disappeared in a Soviet camp; he was pronounced dead in 1948. Johnson and his mother remained in communist East Germany until his mother left for the West in 1956, after which Johnson was banned from working regularly. In 1959, shortly before the publication of his first novel. Speculation about Jacob in West Germany, he emigrated to West Berlin on a tram, leaving the East forever behind. Other novels, the third book about Achim, Absence, and two opinions, and then in quick succession. A member of the legendary Gruppe 47, Johnson lived from 1966 to 1968 with his wife and daughter in New York, compiling a high school anthology of postwar German literature. On Tuesday, April 18, 1967, at 5:30 p.m., as he later told the story, he saw Gesine Cresspahl, a character from his previous work, walking along the south side of Forty-second Street from Fifth to Sixth Avenue near Bryant Park; he asked what she was doing in New York, and eventually convinced her to let him write his next novel about the year of her life. The anniversaries were published in four parts - in 1970, 1971, 1973 and 1983 - and were quickly recognized in Germany as one of the great novels of the century. In 1974, Johnson left Germany in isolation of Sheerness-on-Sea, England, where he struggled through health and personal problems to finish his magnum opus. He died at the age of forty-nine, shortly after it was published. Damion Searls is a translator from German, French, Norwegian and Dutch and an English-language writer. His own books include We have done and where we go, inkblots, and the philosophy of translation. In 2019, he received the Helen and Kurt Wolf Translator Award for Uwe Johnson's Jubilee. He grew up on Riverside Drive in New York City, three blocks from Gesin Cresspal's apartment.
