Unless otherwise stated, our sizes are correct in size. We also have women's and men's size charts available in each product description to help you find the best size for you. By Liz Hull for MailOnline and Larissa Brown for the Daily Mail Updated: 08:30 BST, 16 February 2012 One size fits all? Fitting rooms can be a nightmare when you don't know what size you've dragged armies of dresses into the locker room, only to find the size that suits you in the last store no longer makes it over your hips. It may be known as vanity sizes, but the High Street trick understated the size of the garment to make shoppers feel slimmer leaves most of us are disappointed rather than flattered. However, help is at hand - after one shopper became so fed up with the confusion in the dressing room that she developed a website that tells women what size will fit them in every store. Computer programmer Anna Powell-Smith has created what size I am? the website after reading an article that criticized stores for their misleading labelling. The program asks women to enter their bust, waist and hip measurements and then calculates that the size of the dresses they need to go to a range of High Street retailers, including Marks and Spencer, Next and zara. And it also suggests which stores are likely to have something suitable, so shoppers can avoid hunting for dress whistles if the Warehouse is going to offer a better fit. Miss Powell-Smith has adapted the website for smartphones so that women can use the calculator while driving. Perhaps surprisingly, when she analyzed the measurements it is not necessarily the most expensive or the most fashionable stores that offer slim fits. She found that Next has the smallest sizes on the High Street, while the size of ten in Whistles, zara or reiss is actually more than ten in ASOS, Monsoon or MHS. A typical size 12 in Reiss, for example, is about two inches more on the bust, waist and hips than on the Next. Women with 28-inch waist-buying clothes in Jaeger will need to opt for a size ten but will need to purchase a size 12 on Next, while those who buy a size 16 in Dorothy Perkins are about three inches smaller around the hips than those who chooses the same size in Jaeger. Huge discrepancy: As the High Street measures up to Miss Powell-Smith said: As everyone who has ever bought clothes knows, High Street sizes are completely crazy. You can easily be a size eight in one store, and a size 14 in another, and impossible your size without a lot of zip-controversy. In the UK, the size 16 on Jaeger has a bust of 42.3in, waist 34.6in 34.6in 44.9 inches. The size 16 in Banana Republic has a bust of 38.5 inches, a waist of 30.3 inches and a hip of 40.5 inches. It's a four inch difference, and it's not uncommon. The data also showed that MHS and Karen Millen offer clothes for a more pear-shaped customer, while TopShop and Oasis cater for less curvy, more boyish figures. Miss Powell-Smith, whose website can be found on sizes.darkgreener.com, added: 'I was interested to see different body shapes flattered by the different stores. Overall, Banana Republic and Warehouse are best prepared, and LK Bennett and zara cut for an established waistline. Vanity size has been common on the High Street for at least the past seven years. In 2005, Jane Shepherdson, then director of fashion at TopShop, said that changing body types needed to be reflected. She said: It is well documented that women have gotten more over the last few years. Increase online calculator What size am I? will generate the right size in different stories, using your measurements women don't have small waists anymore, they have bigger busts, we're fed more, we eat more now, so we need to respond to that. It is certainly true that British women have changed shape amazingly in 50 years. A national size study found that the average waist measurement has grown from 27.5 inches to 34 inches over the past five decades. The hips are usually 1.5 inches wider by 40.5 inches and the bust has increased by the same amount to 38.5 inches. BSI introduced standardized clothing sizes in 1982 that allow for leeway of up to an inch and a half, but stores are not required to follow these guidelines. A EU committee was set up five years ago to investigate the possibility of forcing retailers to use standard measurements under the law, but no plans have yet been announced. Visit What size am I?
