Apple today unveiled its new iOS 13 at a developer conference. While there are tons of interesting features such as the dark mode and new photography app, the company has introduced a bunch of features specifically for India. The new version of iOS will bring support for all 22 official Indian languages. In addition, you can specify during the settings if you speak several languages, and the phone will customize the keyboard, dictation languages, and preferred languages accordingly. Apple also introduced a Romanized Hindi and An English bilingual keyboard that supports predictive text. What's more, iOS 13 also has a Hindi keyboard in the Devnagri script, which also supports typing offers. This is a big deal for Hindi-speaking iPhone users in India. The company has also introduced system-level fonts for four languages: Gurmuhli, Kannada, Odia and Gujarati. iOS 13 also brings new Indian male and female voices to Siri, which sounds more natural. It also adds download optimization for apps such as Netflix when you use data to download content. Overall, this is a significant range of features for users in India. However, this is only a small step in a market where Apple has failed to make major strides over its Android competitors.
