Today's desktop is very clean, focusing on wallpaper and just the right amount of useful information. Despite the look of things, it's actually a Windows desktop, and it's pretty easy to repeat on that. Do you want your desktop to look like this? Here's what you need: This desktop was made for a Windows machine, but of course nothing wants it to happen on your Mac. If you're a Mac user, just grab a copy of Geektool instead of Rainmeter, and you should be good to go. Do you have a great beautifully productive desktop of your own that you would like to share? Go ahead and post it on the Lifehacker Desktop Show and tell the Flickr group with a description of how you did it, and this could be the next featured desktop. G/O Media can get the commissionMario Kart Live: Home Chain April Desktop Glory (en) Lifehacker Desktop Show and Tell Flickr Group You can follow Adam Dacis, author of this post, on Twitter and Facebook. Hoping to find the right balance, Spanish researchers estimated the duration of exposure to solar radiation needed to obtain recommended doses of vitamin D.While 10 to 20 minutes in the sun is sufficient in spring and summer, nearly two hours will be required in the winter months, the researchers found, concluding, concluding that it is difficult to reach optimal values all year round for the vast majority of the population. Vitamin D Deficiency While It Is True that too much ultraviolet radiation can contribute to cancer, aging skin, and other health problems, it also lowers blood pressure, synthesizes vitamin D, and improves the treatment of several diseases. Vitamin D deficiency is associated in adults with a higher risk of developing various diseases. Since very few foods contain this vitamin, its synthesis in the skin as a result of sun exposure is the main natural source that exists. Therefore, researchers from the Solar Radiation Research Group at the Polytechnic University of Valencia (UPV) intended to find the time of exposure necessary to obtain the recommended doses of vitamin D without harming our health. In Spain, despite being a country with hours of sunlight, several articles reported a high percentage of vitamin D deficiency among different segments of the Spanish population, said Maria Antonia Serrano, a scientist from UPV and lead author of the study.29 minutesSerrano and her colleagues estimated the time it takes to receive the recommended doses - equivalent to the daily intake of 1,000 IU (international units) of vitamin D - in an area such as the city of Valencia, which receives a large dose of UV radiation during the year. They analyzed ultraviolet solar radiation (UVER) noon (between 12:30 and 1:30 p.m.) for four four from 2003 to 2010. These figures were used to calculate the time that was delayed in order to cause sunburn. They found that in July, a person with normal skin could only spend 29 minutes in the sun without erythema, a technical name for sunburn. But in January the time increases to more than two hours - 150 minutes. Maintaining vitamin D in winter Study has shown that even in sunny countries like Spain, it is difficult to achieve recommended doses of vitamin D in winter due to the excessive time required. On the other hand, in the middle of the day in spring and summer, with 25% of the body exposed, about 10 minutes of sun exposure at the beginning of the day will be enough to meet the daily needs of vitamin D . The resulting radiation also depends on posture, body shape and clothing. It should also be remembered that not all areas of the body synthesize vitamin D with the same efficiency, - said Serrano. Human age also plays an important role in the synthesis of vitamin D from UV radiation, because the older a person becomes less able to produce vitamin D: middle-aged adults have 66% of potential children should do so. These results can help to take the right steps to correct any deficiency, such as informing the medical profession about the usefulness of increasing vitamin D intake in the diet or through supplements, the Spanish researcher concludes the results were published in the journal Science of the General Environment. I did this a long time ago when I needed a booth to hold up the Ocarina Tabs that I had printed out. It's pretty effective. One of my friends gave me a stand and I decided to mode it a bit so he could keep himself. I tilted the bottom pieces and glued a thin piece of cardboard to the bottom to help keep things going. Then I just glued the bottom 2 things to a pair of wooden blocks. I'm sorry if you came here looking for a homemade booth that you could do as well. Trust me, I tried to make one and it never came out straight until I got this piece. So if for any reason you want to turn a note booth app into an almost portable music booth, I hope it helps. Dynamic signs are musical signs used to indicate how much note or phrase should be performed on. Dynamic signs dictate volume (volume or softness), but also a change in volume over time (gradually louder or gradually softer). For example, volume can change slowly or dramatically, at different speeds. Dynamic signs can be found on music sheets for any instruments. Instruments as different as cello, piano, French horn and xylophone can all play notes in different volumes and thus are subject to dynamic signs. There are no records confirming who the first composer is. or invented dynamic signs, but Giovanni Gabrieli was one of the first users of musical notations. Notations. was a Venetian composer during the Renaissance and in the early stages of the Baroque era. During the romantic period, composers began to use dynamic signs more and increase their diversity. The table below lists widely used dynamic signs.
