Strawweight ufc weight

The Wikimedia List article ultimate fighting championship (UFC) champions are fighters who have won UFC championships. [1] Historical records When the UFC was founded in 1993, mixed martial arts was not sanctioned in the United States and did not include weight class. Instead of the traditional championship model, the UFC held tournaments where the winner was given a permanent name. [2] In response to criticism from Sen. John McCain, which saw the loss of the television agreement and the banning of the sport in 36 states, the UFC increased its cooperation with state athletic committees and introduced weight-specific titles in 1997, starting with UFC 12 and introducing weight-specific titles. [3] The original codification of the weight classes introduced only two divisions: the heavyweight, which grouped all competitors above 200 pounds (91 kg), and light, which includes all competitors at 199 pounds (90 kg) and below. At UFC 14, the lightweight division would be renamed middleweight, although that would still include all fighters at 199 pounds (90 kg) and below. [4] The lightweight moniker later returned to UFC 16 with a new division of fighters weighing 77 kg and under. [4] In 2000, the New Jersey State Athletic Control Board completely took control of MMA in its home state and developed new rules and weights that eventually became a de facto rule for all mixed martial arts. [6] In 2001, UFC rearranged its weight class from UFC 31 to comply with these new regulations. [7] At the time, this brought the number of active divisions of the UFC to five: lightweight, welterweight, middleweight, light and heavyweight. That would be nearly ten years before the UFC expands the division's offerings to include lower weight classes. The First Amendments came in late 2010, when the UFC merged with sister organization World Extreme Cagefighting (WEC). Since the WEC focused on lighter-weight fighters, This merger necessitated the addition of both featherweight and bantamweight divisions to the UFC, starting with The Ultimate Fighter 12. [8] In early 2012, the UFC decided to dig even more into the lower weight class when it was announced that the flyweight division would be included in their line-up, starting with FX: Alves vs. Kampmann UFC. [9] In November 2012, due to the impending dissolution of their sister organization Strikeforce, the UFC announced that they would add female fighters to their roster for the first time in the history of promotion. Initially, only the women's bantamweight division was transferred, the first match of the division UFC 157. [10] Just over a year later, the UFC announced that they would expand the weight class of women's fighters with the women's strawweight division,[11] the first bout of UFC Fight Night: Cowboy vs. Miller on 10:00 a.m. on 10:00 a.m. at UFC Fight Night: Cowboy vs. Miller's team introduced the featherweight division for women at the end of 2016, with the first bout at UFC 208 on February 11, 2017. Later that year, the UFC announced that it would officially enter the women's flyweight division and the 26th edition of The Ultimate Fighter.
