You get the acoustically complex '61 Harmonic Tremolo, the swamy and sultry '63 Power Tube Tremolo, and the edgy and balanced '65 Photocell Ty Tremolo. You'll also get classic 60s Spring Tank Reverb, inventive 70s Electronic Plate Reverb, and nostalgic 80s Hair Rack Reverb. With eight settings to set up, you'll get intensive control over the tremolo and reverb characteristics. Go from splashy, lobbing twang, throbbing, swamy blues, all the way to the sunning, shimmer, and serene reverberations of the pads. Pair that with a true topkick, and you have yourself a history of tremolo and reverb in the pedal board friendly format. This example connects the 61&1 Harmonic Trem with the reverbberata of the 1960s. Reverb is the first in the chain, a faithful vintage combo amp. The harmonic three creates a nice greasy sound for some champaigne side work, and the reverb adds a little more depth to the lower mix setting. Create some unique sounds by adjusting the speed of the handle in real time with the expression pedal. Using the reverbber of the 61&1 Harmonic Tremolo and the soft reverbber of the 70s, the speed of the knob is adjustable between 9:00 and 12:00. Listen to the soft phaser effect that is the signature element of '61 Harmonic Tremolo. In this example, Tremolo is a router after the reverbberata of the 70s, which gives the reverb a bit of choppy quality. Using the reverbber of the 70s, Decay is set to near maximum. The intensity of Harmonic Tremolo '61 starts from scratch, and at 0.47 is set until noon. Check out the incept nature of this slow '61 Harmonic Tremolo. This clip shows 70s Reverb. Here we use 80s reverberations with a very long and soft decay. '61 Harmonic Tremolo engaged at 0.25, where he routed to reverb. The reverb serves in the '63 Tube Three to produce a classic tone amp combo. '63 Tube Tremolo with maximum intensity and slow speed creates a hypnotic, soothing pulse. Reverb of the 60s is added first to fill three further. Here the speed increases and the intensity decreases to accentuate some quick finger-selection. Again, a dose of 60s Spring fattening up to the feed signal '63 Tremolo Pipe. '63 Tube Tremolo with moderate intensity and faster speed creates traffic for this blues train. The reverb of the 70s is used in front of the three, filling the signal and emphasizing the three envelopes. This clip shows the 70s Reverb with maximum decay running on the '63 Tube Tremolo. Initially the intensity of the three is set to zero and then gradually increases to maximum and then decreases back to zero intensity, all while the reverb continues its decay. Using the bland '63 Tube Tremolo and 80s Reverb with long decay time, you can generate some very calm and finely moving pads. The 80s reverberation is set to be a high blend with a long decay, feeding in '65 Photo Three to produce a tubulent wall of sound. Following the '65 Photo Treh from the 70s Reverb, some mysterious and moody sounds are made. Grandios lead a good melody. '65 Photo Tremolo feeds 70s reverberations to add sultry quality to this melodic piece. Using 65 Photo Tremolo and very thin 70s reverb, we adjust the speed from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m., to 3 a.m., then to the maximum, then to a low. An 80s reverb with '65 Photo Tremolo used to create Spacey's waiting pad. At about 0.31 the intensity is minimized and then returned at the end. '61 Harmonic Tremolo adds a soft vibe and chewy goodness to some simple chords. The first part has a slow speed with maximum intensity, emphasizing the depth and completeness that the tremolo tube produces. The second part brings the intensity down and increases the speed a little bit to complement some soft aggregated chords. '65 Photo Tremolo gets hit to produce a frantic, choppy three with intensity and speed at maximum. We start with '65 Photo Tremolo, switch to '63 Tremolo's Tube at 0.09, and then to '61 Harmonic Tremolo at 0.22. This clip highlights the dynamics of the spring tank with a surf twang. With high mix, Spring Reverb creates a classic splash when hit with a strong attack. The reverberations of the 70s are demonstrated, showing a rich, dense and natural sound. The 80s reverb featured, with its slow building density, warmth, and overall great sound. 80s Reverb with maximum decay reaches the synth as wash maintain. Modulating latency lines introduce only the right amount of movement, depth and heat.
