Superhero that runs really fast

Flash is coming to the end of its second season and it just keeps getting better and better. Not only has Barry Allen spent time in the arrow and legends tomorrow, he recently jumped worlds to hang out with Kara on Supergirl – including a bit of footrace fun! The two sped alongside each other to give Barry the speed he needed to jump between the Earth again, so we didn't actually see who would have won, but it raises one of the biggest questions in comic books – who really is the fastest man (or woman) alive? While it's almost impossible for a question to actually answer, we've put together twelve contenders for the title from Marvel and DC. All these speedsters can get from point A to point B flash – and without using teleportation, reality bending, or any other cheating. Just a good old-fashioned speed. The final ranking would require a much deeper discussion than we can fit in here; including who the hero ages, which person (names that are there for several characters), which points to their history we take them from, and who can influence their powers. Consider this starting point, and until we can get all twelve of these guys (and tip) behind the starting line together, tell us who you think would be the main winner in the comments! However, here are the 12 fastest superheroes of all time. 12 Iris and Jai West (DC) Initially, Impulse was the name given to Bart Allen, aka the second Kid Flash. Now, however, the moniker belongs to Iris West. Iris West's second, that is – the daughter of Wally and Linda West, and the great-niece of Iris West, that Barry Allen fell in love with long ago. There have been speeding forces such as infants, Iris and her brother, Jai, aged at accelerated speed and developed speedster powers. While Jai's power manifests itself as an ability to grow his muscles, Rainbow developed full speedster powers and the ability to vibrate with objects. (She also seems older than Jai.) Her speed evolved after her vibrational abilities, and it was only when she gained that full power that Iris took on a shell of momentum, much to the surprise of Flash and Kid Flash. 11 Jesse Quick/Liberty Belle (DC) daughter of first Liberty Belle and Johnny Quick, Jesse Chambers received powers from both of her parents. Her mother, Liberty Belle, gained super strength and speed by calling a miniature replica of Liberty Bell, which she wore on her belt. Her father, Johnny Quick, would access Speed Force using a reciting formula he found in the Egyptian temple (3X2 (9YZ)4A). Jesse therefore got superspeed from both sides, although it was the use of her father's formula that gave her more power because of its connection with Speed Force. Now Jesse is retired Jesse Quick's name and is an ally of other speedsters of the same name as her Freedom Belle. 10 Max Mercury (DC) Zen master speed, Max Mercury is the oldest speedster in the Flash family, a time jumper with a strong connection to the Speed Force. He initially gained his powers when a courier on the American border, a shaman from the Blackfoot tribe, gave speed to him when they attacked, allowing him to escape with the message. He became known as Windrunner, but accidentally brushed against the Speed Force and was thrown forward at the time. Since then, he has been a friend of Jay Garrick, mentor Wally West and father figure Bart Allen. Although he has greater knowledge of Speed Force than most, he is not as fast as many other members of the Flash line as he jumps through a time when he gets too close to Speed Force. 9 Superboy (DC) human/cryptonian hybrid. Superboy Kon-El was created by Camus as a clone of Superman. His blend of human and cryptographic DNA gives him a unique set of powers, including a tactile telekinesis that mimics Superman's powers, and others that come directly from his Kryptonian heritage. His superspeed is one of the last, and the teen titan can travel faster than the human eye can see (as long as he is under yellow sun). In 2011, Superboy took on fellow Teen Titan Kid Flash (Bart Allen) with a footrace that would have told us a lot about his favorite speed... but an echo of the earlier Flash v Superman races, we didn't get a final answer. However, they were close, which puts him at incredibly high speed. (They matter, not won, because Krypto crouch to beat them both!) 8 Northstar and Aurora (Marvel) Jean-Paul and Jeanne-Marie Baubier are twin mutants who were separated at birth and reunited with Wolverine as part of Alpha Flight, the Canadian superhero team. Both twins have the same mutation and powers – flight and superspeed. The two are able to control the kinetic energy in their bodies to an incredible degree, allowing them to move supernaturally fast, sink across the water, create cyclones, driving circles, and all the usual speedster tricks. The twins have the potential to be able to operate at light speed, but although their bodies are adapted to deal with friction from their speed, they couldn't cope with the moving effects at lightspeed. Northstar is fractional faster than his twin, Aurora, but she has greater stamina that allows her to travel at high speeds longer. 7 Supergirl and Powergirl (DC) Superman's cousin is a Kryptonian like him, so Kara Zor-El is the same sun-induced superspeed that Kal-El does. Now with her live-action TV series (Supergirl), Kara was originally Superman's oldest cousin, but her pod was knocked off course, and by the time she made it to the ground, Kal-El had aged far past her. It also gives him more speed than War because he is exposed to the Earth the sun lasts longer (and he is proportionally larger and stronger for the most part). Powergirl, also a Kryptonian, is a Supergirl from Earth-2, one of the only survivors in her universe. As such, her powers are almost identical to Supergirl's, although she has a different experience, fighting style, and ahem assets. 6 Quicksilver (Marvel) Son of Magneto and brother of Scarlet Witch, Pietro Maximoff's speed is the result of his mutation. His speed doesn't come with other improvements, but it effectively gives him faster reflexes and greater stamina. He also has temperament as fast as he is! Speedster can maintain its speed over long distances, but is also using them in small spaces to create hurricanes, and can run across the water or up to the walls. He has also used his ability to vibrate his muscles, wreaking havoc on everything he touched. The speedster is much faster than normal people, but his top speed ranges from about 200 mph all the way to Mach 5. After the events of M-Day, Pietro lost his powers (and briefly gained the right to travel in time thanks to Terrigen Mists), but seems to have regained them in the latest comics. 5 Kid Flash (DC) Wally West was a Kid Flash when he first got superspeed – a name that he took on in honor of his mentor, Barry Allen. However, the current Kid Flash (since Wally has become Flash in his own right) is Bart Allen, a young speedster from another time. Barry Allen's grandson, he was born with a hyper-accelerated metabolism that sped up his growth and could shorten his life. As a rescue to him expectations, his parents sent him back to our time, which slowed his growth, but left him with his powers of super speed. Trained by Max Mercury, he still learns to control his powers and connect with speed force. A member of the Teen Titans, he can reach incredible speed, and it's been suggested that he has an even better connection to the Speed Force than Wally West. As such, he has been able to use his powers to become invisible, and even create clones of himself to send with time. 4 Shazam/Captain Marvel (DC) Formerly called Captain Marvel (no, not that Captain Marvel, not Ms. Marvel, not Captain Mar-vell, all of which are Marvel characters, and who may be part of the reason for the name change!), Shazam is a superhero alter ego Billy Batson. Chosen as the successor to the ancient wizard Shazam, when he says the magician's name, he becomes a superhero with the wisdom of Solomon, the strength of Hercules, the strength of atlas, the power of Zeus, the daring Achilles, and (most importantly, for this list) the speed of Mercury. His speed is Godlike, the rivalry of Superman and Flash, and he moves so fast that he is invisible to the naked eye. His speed also allows him to defy gravity by giving him the opportunity to travel around the Earth and even outer space. 3 McCarrii's obsession with speed is that he has channeled all his cosmic energy into faster, thus by singing and even losing him many other abilities that eternal have. Part of the race for beings created by Celestials, the Eternals have the ability (to varying degrees) to teleport, fly, and project energy blasts. The Eternals are also functionally immortal, telepathic and super-strong. Makkari's focus on his speed has made him the fastest of the Eternals, with the ability to outrun gravity (to race up to the walls and over water), create cyclones while driving in circles, and is now able to run at light speeds for a long period of time. However, his speed obsession is also detrimental to his health – it has reduced his strength (although he is still much stronger than the average person), and his body accumulates fatigue poison over time. Superman 2 (DC) Superman has all sorts of incredible powers thanks to his Kryptonian origins – and only one of them is his superspeed. Still, it's one of his longest standing and best-known powers, giving him the slogan faster than a speeding bullet. Of course, Superman is much, much faster than a speeding bullet that moves at a warmth pace compared to this superhero! His speed is even the first thing I noticed about him in the past – for Smallville, for example, he was originally known as Red-Blue Blur. Superman's speed has evolved over the years since he first appeared – in the Golden Age, he wasn't actually so fast – able to outrun the train, but still isn't capable of the kind of feats that he finds easily now. At his top speed, Superman can derail the lights, but not Wally West (although the race with previous Flashes ended in dead heats). 1 Flash (DC) Probably the best known comic speedster (especially now that's a very popular TV series about him!), several people have worn a coat from Flash over the years. The first Flash was Jay Garrick, who inhaled the radioactive chemicals that gave him superspeed. The second Flash was Barry Allen, a scientist working in a police force who was struck by lightning in his lab. (Both Jay and Barry have appeared in Flash, but it's Barry who is the star of the show.) Finally, we have Wally West, Barry's nephew, who got his powers almost identical to a lab accident. All three can operate at lightpeed and phase with objects, but Wally is the fastest of them all, with the ability to operate at the speed of light and use his speed in advance and-heard of ways thanks to his ability to tap into Speed Force itself. - Do you think of any other superspeedsters that would be on this list?
