Instead, he says to forget testing, because it is almost impossible to accurately distinguish from the body's fluids the state of the body's tissues. Okay, that sounds reasonable. What then can you do? Just take food and practices that are alkaline shaping and let your body sort out. This book tells you that they are. Instead, he says to forget testing, because it is almost impossible to accurately distinguish from the body's fluids the state of the body's tissues. Okay, that sounds reasonable. What then can you do? Just take food and practices that are alkaline shaping and let your body sort out. This book tells you that they are. Remember that some acid-forming foods are essential for good health. So the question is the balance. Included is a large catalog of additives for sale. Supplements are not necessary. They are concentrated and can create dangerous imbalances. If we can't get a good read about the condition of our body tissues, how can we know what they need? How can we safely self-medicate? Why not trust the wisdom of the body to keep yourself in homeostasis? Dr. Barudi says that genetically modified foods are a complex topic, as there are many pros and cons. I disagree! There are no advantages for consumers. On page 60 he says you need a little dining salt, which is nonsense. Salt in any quantity is toxic and is not bioavailable. He's doing nothing but harm. He advises drinking plenty of water, another myth. Drinking water is absolutely unnecessary if you eat the right food and, in the absence of thirst, is not profitable. Of course, if you eat salt you will need water to dilute the toxic salts. He says that drinking water helps proper digestion, but I agree with Dr. Emmett Densmore, who said: Digestion goes ahead much better when gastric juice is not diluted with fluids. If you are taking the right diet and lifestyle, you don't need to worry about pH. measures are not needed. Get your trace of minerals from food, not supplements.
