Necrotizing soft tissue infections (NSTIs) of the arm are rare, poorly understood diseases that are rapidly progressive. Prompt diagnosis is mandatory to ensure patient survival. A combination of aggressive surgery and broad spectrum antibiotics is the standard of care. However, the optimal treatment strategy has not been clearly defined. We present a case of NSTI of the arm treated with extensive radical excision and delayed primary closure, followed by intravenous antibiotic therapy, over a one month period. The patient's wound healed without sequelae and was eventually able to return to light duty work. NSTIs of the arm are a challenging diagnostic and therapeutic problem and there are no well-defined treatment recommendations. We present a unique case of a patient with NSTI of the arm successfully treated with radical resection and delayed primary closure. The clinical presentation, diagnosis, management and therapeutic options for NSTIs of the arm are discussed.Q: Print in Python using a.txt file that contains numbers as text in Python I have a.txt file with text in it.
