If you're a business owner, one of the key questions you'll need to ask yourself is, how much travel should I be taking? What's the best thing about getting out of the office? There's no denying that travelling to new places is fun. It's also an opportunity to expand your business network and increase your knowledge about new things. But you don't want to miss out on valuable time at your business because you're constantly getting new information and meeting new people. That's why one of the most important decisions you'll have to make when it comes to travel is how much travel you should be taking. If you're unsure about how much time to spend on travel, there's a few guidelines you can use. The Rule of Threes The simplest thing to keep in mind when it comes to planning your next trip is to plan to take one trip a month. This is pretty much the rule of three's. Why? Because if you're planning to take one trip a month, you're not likely to be chasing after anyone. The only people you'll be chasing after are yourself and your potential clients. So you'll be much more productive and can focus more on your business without having to worry about chasing down the latest big news or meeting new business contacts. Spending more time chasing after your business is going to leave you feeling exhausted and frustrated. Actions Speak Louder Than Words To make sure you're not taking on too much travel, it's best to keep it simple. If you're looking to expand your network, find one or two key contacts. And don't worry too much about the expense, it's a necessary evil in the world of business. If 520fdb1ae7
