The presence of Schistocytes on peripheral blood smear is the hallmark of thrombotic thrombocytopenic purpura. The presence of schistocytes is a sensitive indicator of thrombotic thrombocytopenic purpura, but the absence of schistocytes does not exclude the diagnosis. Thrombotic thrombocytopenic purpura has a high mortality rate. The mortality is due to the development of cerebral hemorrhage. Examination of a bone marrow aspirate by light microscopy, a bone marrow biopsy, and an electron microscopic examination of the bone marrow are useful for establishing a diagnosis of thrombotic thrombocytopenic purpura. The detection of monoclonal gammopathy in the serum and/or urine of a patient with thrombotic thrombocytopenic purpura is often associated with the diagnosis. There is no difference in the sensitivity of the detection of antiplatelet antibodies in patients with thrombotic thrombocytopenic purpura who have been treated with plasmapheresis or in patients treated with antiplatelet medications.
