Released on November 19, 2008, Beyond the Sword features a brand new civilization, the Romans, as well as eight new wonders and unique government types. The expansion also includes additional downloadable content (DLC), including an additional conquest victory condition, several "city-building" tasks and new leader traits. Sid Meier's Civilization V, released in 2009, includes a "Civ 4" option that unlocks all of the improvements and structures of the Civilization IV game world, and incorporates nearly all of the features and mechanics of the Civilization V game, as well as the new Persian civilization in the expansion pack, Persian (2010). Additionally, all of the Civilizations available in Civ IV have a counterpart in the expansion packs, with the exception of the Norse civilization and the new Persian civilization. Cooperative multiplayer Beyond the Sword includes 4-player cooperative multiplayer. The game features two modes of multiplayer; in the "Strategic" mode, players can play as individual countries or can play as the Roman Republic or as any of the four other civilizations included in the expansion. In the "Combat" mode, four of the included civilizations participate in a battle in which a certain set of parameters are defined. In the included pre-battle scenario, players must choose which civilization they will lead in battle.
