Yeah, look for a plain gold sticker right under the front bumper. We just got this one from a really nice customer, who sent it to us this week. 4 - 1983 Cadillac Eldorado Biarritz - Wish It Was Christmas 1980. A brand new Cadillac Eldorado Biarritz was up for sale at an auction in Atlanta, and the bidding topped out at $38,500. This Eldorado wasn't just a pretty face, either: it was loaded with options, including a rare high performance 455 cubic inch V-8, aluminum wheels, and a rear decklid spoiler. It was sold to the winning bidder, who is now a well-known car collector in the area. As of 2008, the car is still in the owner's garage, which means it's in pristine condition, as the original owner never drove the car. Did he end up regretting his purchase? 3 - 1988 Jeep Wrangler Limited - Loses Someone Special. This Wrangler is a perfect example of how an in-betweenner can become an impressive collector car. Built in 1988, it was originally a one-owner, black-over-white color that was factory equipped with a three-speed transmission and all-terrain tires. In 2003, the previous owner had the Wrangler repainted black-over-red, and gave it a power steering system. Not only did he lose interest in his Wrangler, but he also lost interest in his wife. She couldn't handle the Wrangler's lack of practicality, so he sold it to another guy, who took it to Florida and found an old relative who owned an off-road vehicle, which he gave to the new owner. She in turn sold it for a modest profit. So who do you think the new owner is?

2 - 1987 Mercedes Benz 300D - Built for a Wrecking Crew! This 1987 300D was originally a Mercedes-Benz 300D LWB (long wheelbase), and it was first registered in Germany in 1996. It was bought in Germany in 1999 by an insurance agent named Claus. Not long after buying it, Claus discovered it had suffered a front-end collision and he couldn't get the damaged front bumper off the car. So he bought a new bumper, an entirely different front bumper, and then a front wheel bearing, front wheel hub, brake disc, brake caliper, and brake booster. He also bought an expensive mobile phone for the car and a new gear shift,
