Best Relationship, (Your Name) Signatures: Company Representative (Sign) Company Representative (Print) - The date when I write this article on the way home, speaking at a conference of IT professionals who are trying to figure out how to sell service contracts (something technology companies call managed services). Instead of offering to be your IT guy when you have problems, the Managed Services Provider (MSP) offers a standard set of technology services that most companies need. For example, MSPs may suggest proactively managing a computer network, installing new software when updates become available, and checking viruses. The difficulty for many MSPs is to convince customers who have had the luxury of calling only when they had a problem to commit to an ongoing relationship focused on a standard set of services. But for businesses that commit long-term to their service providers, there are a number of hidden advantages. In my last company, we made the transition from a general service provider to offering standardized service contracts. Our customer base included over 100 from the Fortune 500 list, so we got the hang of making a case for our customers that a standard service contract was better for them than hiring us on a one-time basis. Here are five reasons why a standardized service contract will make your business better: 1. Specialists better than generalists Would you ask your family doctor to remove the gallbladder? When you standardize around a predictable set of services, the service provider gets very good at providing these services. Unlike the traditional service model, when a vendor develops a custom solution for customer or offers a wide range of services, standardized service means that the provider's employees repeat the same process process And with this repetition comes increased competence. Offering a standard set of contractual services means that customers are served faster. There's a world-famous burger stand called Webber on the way to a country cottage two hours north of Toronto. For my money, Webber makes the best burgers in the world. They avoided the current trend towards exotic toppings on your burger in favor of sticking with a standard set of basics. You can't contaminate your burger with cabbage leaves, alfalfa sprouts or chipotle mayonnaise. At Webber's, they only offer ketchup, mustard and fun. That's it. Some customers want sprouts? Sure, but offering a litany of toppings will slow down service to the point where hungry drivers will stop elsewhere. True Webber fans get a surprisingly quick service. Shorter Turnaround Time Not only customers contact the service provider faster when the service provider specializes in only a few services; they will also get their issue fixed faster. At Southwest Airlines, they only buy 737s. Technicians always carry spare parts, and they turn planes faster than any other airline. Not only did the southwest turn their 737s around quickly; As one of Boeing's biggest customers, they also get a good deal on equipment. Service providers often have to buy raw materials that go to providing the services you buy from them. The more a service provider can specialize and standardize their services, the better the prices they receive and the more savings they can pass on to you. 5 Fixed before it breaks down When there's a permanent relationship, the service provider is starting to know what you need - even before you do. This will have a great relationship with fixing problems before they start. The Mosquito Squad, which helps homeowners eradicate mosquitoes, is a good example. The problem with mosquitoes is that they are much harder to deal with once their eggs hatch. The trick in fighting mosquitoes is to spray before their eggs hatch. That's why most of the Mosquito Squad business is created around the standard, annual contract they signed with the homeowner. The value proposition is simple: We know that you want to bug the free yard so commit to the current relationship and we will spray actively so that mosquitoes never become a problem in the first place.
