Simile and metaphor worksheet

About this worksheet: This worksheet of smiles directs each student to label each sentence as a cylinder or metaphor. Similes worksheet provides a list of smiles and metaphors. A student must read each type on the list and label it as a chilli or metaphor. Simile is a comparison using a word such as or as. The metaphor is a comparison of two things, using words like is or is. Both similes and metaphors are very similar. They're both types of figurative language. This worksheet provides good practice for identifying what is simile, and what is a metaphor. This worksheet is suitable for the 6th century B&B. Write your metaphors Write your metaphorsGiant children the chance to think creatively about metaphors by letting them write their own! Students stretch their imagination and figurative language skills as they think about how to describe their class, bedroom, and more.2.gradeReading & Writing similes and metaphors are related to figurative language techniques. Both smiles and metaphors draw comparisons between two or more things; however, there are some significant differences between them. Similes always use a word like or word to make a comparison. Metaphors don't use that word the way or the same. As a result, metaphors can be more indirect and harder to identify. Here's an example that will help you understand my point: I was lost in the blue, cloudy sky of his eyes. This is an example of metaphor. The speaker compares his eyes to heaven, but this is not explicitly done. The comparison is indirect. Here's the same example, but changed simile: His eyes are like blue, unclouded skies. In this example, the comparison is clearer. It is easier to determine that the speaker is making a comparison. The worksheets and activities on this page will give students a laser-focused practice (an indirect metaphor for BTW) to help them become simile and metaphor experts. These worksheets are available in different formats: PDF files for printing exactly as I formatd these worksheets, Rich Text files to make changes before using them in my classroom, and Ereading Worksheets for web execution on any Internet-connected device. Simile and Metaphor Worksheet 1 – This worksheet has 20 examples of syllables and metaphors. Students read each example, determine whether it's a sim or a metaphor, then explain what the two things are compared. Do you want to distinguish between instruction and make it more difficult for some students? Ask your high-profile character to translate each example into a literal language. Let them explain what the speaker says without poetic devices. With two two two pages, this worksheet is as occupying as useful. Again, students read each piece, circle, whether it's a simile or a metaphor, and then explain which two things are compared. I also recommend you have your own high achieve students to translate each example of literal language as well, especially if you assign it to the classroom. I think some students are working very quickly on these issues and need an additional cognitive function to keep them in dispute. Like others, this worksheet uses two two two-sided sheets, but you can save a lot of paper if it is not printed at all. Just assign students the ereading worksheet at the bottom of this paragraph. It contains the same questions and a long response to explain which two things are being compared. Of course, online questions are automatically categorized, providing immediate feedback to students and less workload for teachers, and results can be printed, saved, sent, or even shared on a FaceBook. You should really give it a chance if your students have access to the Internet.
