To recover, you'll want to download, install, and run Sophos Anti-Virus & Security that will then find the serial number for you. Once you have the serial number, then you'll want to register the product to that serial number by visiting the manufacturer's website. Some applications are very easy to get. For instance, when you are using iTunes, a big red button will appear on the right side of the iTunes window that will ask you for the serial number. The iTunes has an option to register that serial number and upon clicking, you will be taken to a screen where you can register the product. The most expensive tool is probably Datawhale Serial Number Removal Software which is $45. It won't erase the serial number but it will help you remove the serial number so that you can re-register your product under a different serial number. If you are looking for a simple way to remove the serial number, then you might want to look at Sinchomn which costs only $9. You can search for serial numbers that you can remove and try to recover them. 520fdb1ae7
