However, instead of doing your job, you are playing with various things like email, social media, watching videos, surfing blogs and forums. You know you have to work, but you don't want to do anything. We're all familiar with the procrastination phenomenon. When we postpone, we waste our free time and postpone the important tasks we need to do until it's too late. And when it's really too late, we should panic, I wish we'd started sooner. The chronic procrastinators I know have spent years of their lives in this cycle. Delaying, postponing, unwinding, hiding from work, just facing jobs when inevitable, then repeating this cycle. It's a bad habit that eats us up and prevents us from getting bigger results in life. Don't let procrastination take over your life. Here, I'll share my personal steps on how to stop procrastination. These 11 steps will certainly apply to you! 1. Take Your Work into Small Steps The reason we're deterating is because subconsciously we find the work too overwhelming for us. Cut it into small pieces, then focus on one section at the time. If you still delay the mission after demolishing it, then break it further. Soon, your task will be so simple that wow, it's so simple, I can do it now! For example, I am currently writing a new book (how to achieve something in life). Writing books on a full scale is a tremendous project and can be overwhelming. However, when I break down into these stages – (1) Research (2) Decision making the subject (3) Outline (4) Preparation of content (5) writing #10 #1 Sections, (6) Revision (7) and so on. Suddenly it looks very manageable. So what I'm doing is I'm not thinking about other stages, focusing on my best talent and achieving that to my best talent. When it's over, I move on to the next. 2. Change Your Environment Different environments have different effects on our productivity. Look at your desk and your room. Do they want to work for you, or do they want to hug you and sleep? Second, you should look at changing your workspace. One thing to remember is that you may lose an environment that inspired us before After a while. If that's the case, then it's time to change things. See the steps and steps of 13 Strategies to Accelerate Your Productivity, #2 #3 your environment and workspace. 3. Create a Detailed Timeline with Specific Deadlines Only 1 deadline for your job is like a reprieve. Because we get the impression that we have time, and we keep pushing everything back until it's too late. Separate your project (see #1, then create a global timeline with specific due dates for each small task. That way, you know that you have to finish each task by a specific date. Your timelines should also be solid - so if you don't finish this today, it will jeopardize everything you plan from now on. This creates an urgency to act in this way. My goals are divided into monthly, weekly, daily task lists, and the list is a call to action that I must perform by the specified date, otherwise my goals will be canceled. Here are more tips on setting due dates: 22 Tips for Effective Dates 4. Eliminate your Procrastination Pit-Stops because if you do a little too much procrastination, maybe it's easy to postpone. Identify your browser yer signs that take up a lot of your time and scroll them into a separate less accessible folder. Disable the automatic notification option on your e-mail client. Get rid of the distractions around you. I know some people are going to get out of the way and delete or disable their Facebook accounts. I think it's a bit harsh and extreme because addressing procrastination is more about being aware of our actions than resisting it with self-binding methods, but if you think it's necessary for that, go ahead. 5. Hang out with People Who Inspire You to Take Action, and if you spend only 10 minutes talking to Steve Jobs or Bill Gates, you'll be more inspired to act than spend 10 minutes doing nothing. The people we're with affect our behavior. Of course spending time every day with Steve Jobs or Bill Gates is probably not a viable method, but the principle applies - You identify the Secret Power of Each Person around people, friends or colleagues - most likely go-getters and hard workers - and hang out with them more often. Soon their drive and soul will also instill. As a personal development blogger, I hang out with inspired personal development professionals by reading their blogs and corresponding with them regularly via email and social media. It communicates through new media and they all work the same. 6. Getting a buddy having a friend makes the whole process much more fun. Ideally, mate you should be someone with your own set of goals. You can both hold each other accountable for your goals and plans. You both don't have to have the same goals. I have a good friend, who I talk to regularly, and we always ask each other about our goals and our progress in achieving those goals. Needless to say, this encourages us to take action. 7. Tell others about your goals This functions the same #6 on a larger scale. Tell all your friends, colleagues, acquaintances and family about your projects. Now when you see them, they have to ask you about your position on these projects. For example, sometimes I announce my projects on your Personal Excellence blog, Twitter and Facebook, and my readers will constantly ask me about them. It's a great way to hold myself accountable for my plans. 8. Find someone who has already reached the conclusion What is it that you want to achieve here and who are the people who have already achieved it? Go look for them and contact them. If you take action, it's one of the best triggers for action to see that your goals are very well achieved. Re-clarify your goals If you're delaying for a long time, this may reflect a mismatch between what you want and what you're doing now. Most of the time, we grow our goals as we explore more about us, but it doesn't change our goals to reflect that. Get away from work (a short holiday will be fine, another weekend holiday or accommodation will also do) and take some time to re-toss yourself. What exactly do you want to achieve? What do you have to do to get there? What steps should be taken? Are your current work in the same way? If not, what can I do about it? 10. Stop Overly Complicated Things Do you expect the perfect time to do this? Maybe now is not the best time for X, Y, Z reasons? Get rid of that thought because there's never a perfect time. If you keep waiting for someone, you're not going to make it. Perfectionism is one of the biggest reasons for procrastination. Learn more about why perfectionist tendencies can be a bigger disaster than a blessing: Why Being a Perfectionist May Not Be Perfect. 11. Get a Flu and Just Finally Do It! At, it boils down to action. You can do all the strategy, planning and hypothesis, but if you don't act, nothing will happen. Sometimes, I keep complaining about readers and their situations but still get customers who refuse to take action at the end of the day. Reality check! I've never heard of anyone delaying the road to success before, and I don't think that's going to change in the near future. Whatever happens, if you want to get it done, you need to control yourself and do it.
