There are a million ways to make a song and only one true way. Every artist has their own way and no one way is right or wrong. However, in today's world of digital production, it's important to pay attention to how you can make your songs sound the best they can possibly sound. Anyone can make a song sound good if they know how. Follow these simple tips to make your songs stand out from the rest.

1. Keep The Lyrics In Focus You can't ignore lyrics when you're making a song. Your lyrics are your song's 'voice' and they need to be in focus in order to have any impact on the listeners. Don't make the lyrics the background of the song. Keep them in the forefront of the listener's mind and the song's overall message.
2. Record At The Same Speed Never ever ever record at a slower speed than your vocalist's speed. Why? Because your instrument sounds won't be as prominent if it's recorded at a slower speed than your vocalist. And what's the point of having all of those instruments?
3. Use Piano Sounds The piano is a great instrument to use if you want to make a song sound very 'romantic'. There are a variety of sounds that you can choose from as well. If you want a more 'bouncy' sound, use a grand piano. If you want something more rock n' roll, use a rock n' roll piano. The idea here is to try something different. Try out different pianos, different sounds, and different moods in your songs to help them sound different.
4. Use Different Keys Whether you're singing in the key of C or D, it's important to vary the keys you use. This is a good way to make your song sound 'unique', since each key has a different sound. You'll notice that in classical music, they often use the D major key.
5. Have A Variety Of Instruments There are certain instruments that sound good together and there are others that don't
