Campylobacter pylori is the most common aetiological agent of peptic ulcer disease and has been implicated as a co-factor in the pathogenesis of gastric and duodenal ulcers and of gastric cancer. Although there have been several studies of Campylobacter pylori in gastroduodenal ulcer disease, the prevalence in endoscopically diagnosed gastro-oesophageal reflux disease (GERD) has never been assessed. A cross-sectional study of 402 patients, who underwent routine upper gastrointestinal endoscopy between 1995 and 1996, was conducted. Campylobacter pylori status was assessed in antral biopsies by histology, Warthin-Starry silver stain and serology. Presence of Campylobacter pylori was noted in 210 of the 402 (51%) patients. There was no difference in the prevalence of Campylobacter pylori in patients with GERD and those without (53% vs 51%, p=0.7). When patients were stratified according to the presence or absence of peptic ulcer disease, the presence of Campylobacter pylori was not associated with the presence of any type of ulcer (p=0.6). There were no significant differences in the prevalence of Campylobacter pylori between the different risk factors for peptic ulcer disease, including presence of Helicobacter pylori. Campylobacter pylori was also detected in 53% of the control subjects, which is in keeping with previous studies. We conclude that the prevalence of Campylobacter pylori is similar in patients with GERD and those without.
