Remington 870 wingmaster classic trap review

0/5Posto by Jason Brumett The Remington 870 Wingmaster Classic Trap rifle was released in 2000 as a special limited anniversary. This is another one of those target guns like the Remington 1100 Classic Trap which is a cape in my opinion. While you can take it out and shoot every now and then it's nice to be a gun every day. Because? Well, for departures it has a fine gold engraving and a gold-plated trigger..... yes a gold-plated trigger. With a RECOMMENDED PRICE of around $1000 it's a bit expensive, but for all of you gun enthusiasts or those of you who know a passionate gun enthusiast this could be a great gift. This gun could definitely be a piece that is handed down for generations if properly cared for. In addition to the gold intarsio it also has a very nice shiny coat and a shiny blue receiver. I don't have any opportunity to try before I buy, but based on reading the specs it seems to have all the things I like. · The '70s are as hard as an anvil. if the price is right, go! · 870 Trap..... Oh yes, my dad friends had one and it was the best shotgun I've ever in my paws. The first time I shot it [and I was new to trapping shoot] 20 clay birds bit the dust in the air. I wish I had an 870 just like that. Oh, did I say it was one of the most beautiful rifles I've ever seen? Was. Was. · I have one. As far as I know, the only difference is the stock and the average pearl. He doesn't shoot better than my old 870 field rank. In fact, the title suits me worse than the level of field. Don't be wrong, shoot big. But also my other simple Jane 870. · Discussion Starter · #5 · October 31, 2008 Is pump action on the Wingmaster Classic Trap better than a normal 870? The '70s I managed all had shaky and sticky actions. · I have one, my favorite gun for birds and bunny. · Discussion Starter · #7 · November 9, 2008 Can you take all the aftermarket parts of a regular 870? · Like stocks, mind complaints, magazine extensions and so on? Yes. Internally I'm not 100% sure, but I think so. · Discussion Starter · #9 · November 10, 2008 How do stocks, first-hand grips, magazine extensions, and so on? Yes. Internally I'm not 100% sure, but I think so. Well, you called what I already had in mind (magazine extension), so cool... now, to save the money. I would have to take a year off between college and graduate school to work so I had lol money. · I bought a very nice older wingmaster earlier this year. I took that big stock of nuts and forearm off, replaced it with a composite forearm and youthful kick. He removed that beautiful 28-barreled barrel and replaced it with a 21-point eye rod. Added a mag extension, sidesaddle, and torrx. Now it's a big SD shotgun. And 30 minutes in the garage with the old parts and I can catch him hunting for birds. · Like stocks, mind complaints, magazine extensions and so on? Yes. Internally I'm not 100% sure, but I think so. yes, he's trading. The 870 and Model 12 dominated the trap fields years ago. Today there is nothing wrong with them and it should serve you well. I still see a lot of 870 on the field. · Discussion Starter · #12 · November 11, 2008 Is there anyone stocking up on remington 870s? I ask this because I am thinking about the 100th anniversary model, largely just because they can require 3 shells and I always like to have more options, but standard actions never fit my body, regardless of what is done to fit them and monte carlo stocks almost always fit me without having to be readapted. · Boyds, and Missouri's great stock maker, Weineg (definitely miswritten). My dad shoots trap with version 1100 and I'm seriously examining the 870 model. I regularly shoot my synthetic 1100 competition although I would like to have something else in case I feel like changing. It has anyone who has owned or shot only the classic trap model. How is the functionality and performance? Thank you all. Itaca - It's going to be harder than 1100, but there's a reason they sold 10 million 870. · Google Remington 870 trap model opinions and read away. joe · Discussion Starter · #4 · March 26, 2016 A couple of years ago my dad went to buy a normal 870 wingmaster at Cabelas & ended up looking at their six in inventory and coming home disappointed. Apparently there were splits within the end? My fear is that the 870 CT has these same divisions... Does anyone know anything about it? Thank you, Itaca · There's definitely nothing wrong with the Classic Trap 870. They're good solid guns. That said, if I were looking for a Trap 870 model, I would try to find a good used CT or even a TBC. They are workhorses and destroy targets, plus their price will be a little less. · A couple of years ago my dad went to buy a normal 870 wingmaster at cabelas and ended up looking at their six in inventory and coming home disappointed. Apparently there were splits within the end? My fear is that the 870 CT has these same divisions... Does anyone know anything about it? Thank you, Itaca If the split is regarding the running length, along the center of the end of the forehead, under the barrel, this is the way they are made, there is nothing wrong with them. All mine have this from the 1976 870TB production I bought again in 1976, to the last Wingmaster I bought. The 870 TB was like that when I took it out of the box, in 39 years and over 100,000 rounds, it didn't change. If I hadn't already had 4 Remington trap guns and hadn't even supported motorcycle, I would have already bought a Classic Trap 870. · I really like the '70s and '1100s. You own some. But mine are pre-90s champions. I've bought 4, two 870s and two 1100s of late. None None in my possession more than a few months. What I had learned to expect was not present. I'd buy a good used TB or 70s or '80s CT if I wanted one to shoot. · See if you can find a used 870 competition trap. These are single-shot pumps and have a gas valve to help with recoil. They work well and have excellent stepped rib barrels. They usually sell for $700-$800. · I have a vintage 870 TC from the 70s and one from the 90s with the barrel and bottleneck tubes over bored. Both targets smash · What pheasantmaster said..... Get an older one. · Mechanically, and I leave out woodworking, is an old school 870 built differently from the modern version? You'll get a lot of they don't do them like they used to get from older guys on Remingtons, but at the age of 63 (older guy?), here's my experience; I bought new Remingtons from the 70s and 1100s in every decade starting and including the 70s, to this day. My 2012 1100 Competition Synthetic production is one of the 1100 most beautiful, finished and functioning i've seen in over 40 years of clay target shooting. As for the good old days, which I imagine are the 70s now, my September 1976 produces 870 TB, which I bought new in December 1976 had a slight misalignment of the ribs at the end of the culatta. The gun had a number of other small problems, which were corrected; including an incomplete finished extractor and some wood finishing imperfections, so things weren't all perfect in DuPont's time at Ilion. I was too young and stupid then to go after a new barrel, the 60/40 POI gunshot, dead on targets on the ground; Over 100,000 rounds, it still does. My 1100 CS was still the best gun, from the beginning for fit, finish and function, as well as my 1100 Classic Trap. I was actually less impressed by some of the 870s and 870s of the late 80s and 1100s than the previous production, or current. · Mechanically, and I leave out woodworking, is an old school 870 built differently from the modern version? Mainly the stainless steel lift in the receiver (older models) and the light contour rods on the newer ones (it has never been a fan of the newer barrels). barrels).
