Production details Olive Films is an independent film production company, founded in 2009 by writer and director Lisanne Pajot. The films it produces usually range in topic from sociological topics to spiritual spirituality, with a strong emphasis on examining human relationships from a different point of view. Olive Films is also known for its experimental, non-conformist approach to filmmaking, whose directors have included such notable names as Marie-France Pisier (Le Mur de la Pensee, La Femme de dix ans, Immaculate), Guillaume Misy (Déchèts, La Séparation) and Pascal Aurel. Although it has achieved a great deal of success on the festival circuit, and several of its films have found a place in the memory of critics and audiences alike, it has not been so successful in making a profit. This is in large part due to the high budgets that are often attached to its productions. Festival appearances While most films by the Olive Films, and especially the Lisanne Pajot Productions, are screened mainly at film festivals, they have also found a place on the general film market. The rights to this movie, which is in the nature of an interquel to the 1997 film Jupiter Ascending, were originally purchased by the producer of the film's predecessor. This film is now sold on its own, so that Olive Films is the production company that has made it. The movie premiered on the film festival circuit in 2011, and was released on DVD the same year.
